Comments to the Author

This manuscript offers an interesting idea for readers. You managed to review the findings well because in educational studies very few scientists review critical thinking studies. Usually, only sociologists and philosophical researchers often use it. An addition from me from your manuscript is for certain cases such as covid 19 is whether learning such as online learning can be developed? of course, this part will be your research offer in the future. Success for you I am very appreciative and happy to review your manuscript.

Comments to the Author

Abstract already describes in its entirety the important language of the article. in the introduction section, the author is able to parse well, although a little length of explanation, it should be important points to be concise in the introduction section is (1) social facts (Das Sein and Dassolen) (2) literary facts (3) the purpose of writing and (4) arguments/hypotheses. The literature review section has been able to explain well but my note for input only, in addition to explaining the definition of the concept also explains the categorization/manifestation. for the Method section the important thing is How Did You do, although you have explained it well the important thing that should be the main thing is the research process, the stages and techniques need to be elaborated. Habits of the author, this is rarely explained by the author when in fact it is an important part of the article. as for the Result and discussion sections I see already nicely explained, as well as the conclusion part. Success for you.

Dear the editor in chief,

I understood to send my final version and some other documents to the copyeditor email

(bdcenter.copyeditor@gmail.com). However, it seems that I cannot reach the copyeditor email address, and I then decided to send the document to the editorial email address.

Dear the editor,

Here I attach the documents for the publication process. There are five documents attach to this email.

1. The article final version without highlight
2. The article final version_highlighted
3. The turnitined article
4. Payment receipt
5. Proof reading certificate

It is important to note. The similarity index of the artilce reaches 80%. This is so as we have once submitted to the turnitin website of Syiah Kuala University, and it was recorded in the repository system, and once we submit it for the second time, the similarity index turned 80% due to the recorded file in the repository of the university.

Best regards,
