THE SUBJECTIVITY INDICATION OF SCHOOL OF FIQH IN THE INTERPRETATION OF MARRIAGE VERSES

Abstract
This paper has original contribution of knowledge as not issued earlier. The topic is on injustice interpretation of marriage verses stated by Islamic clerics. A number of the Quran verses and the hadith of the Prophet PBUH related to marriage has a general meaning and apply to all parties. The Fuqaha’ (Islamic law scholars/Jurist) of four schools and mufassir (Quran interpreter) of the same school (mazhab), agree to determine the generality of the meaning of several marriage verses to be applied for all without limiting the certain parties. The difference in their opinions is related to the meaning of the word nikah, which is the main subject to understand and interpret the verses. The jumhur (majority) of fuqaha’ and mufassir of the same school always associate the word marriage to the wali (Guardian) so that he must handle the matter concerning the marriage. On the other hand, mufassir from Hanafi school argue that the word nikah applies to a broader meaning and is not exclusively addressed to wali, so the marriage guardianship can be handed to any parties, including women. The different opinions among mufassir in determining the general and specific meaning of the content of the verse are influenced by the background of the school they followed. This article aims to further investigate the subjectivity forms of mufassir to their fiqh school in interpreting the marriage verses. The forms of subjectivity might occur because; the difference views of mufassir in interpreting the Asbab al-Nuzul (the occasion of revelation), the difference in mufassir’s comprehension towards the interpretation of the word nikah which is considered as the key concept in the interpretation of marriage verses. The subjectivity might also be caused by difference views in positioning the hadith as specialization tool to the marriage verses that are still general, and also because their dissent in evaluating the importance of the munasabah (correlation) between the verses and hadith about marriage in helping them interpret.

Introduction
The Quran as the first and foremost source of law in Islam is continuously interpreted and deciphered by the fuqaha’ and mufassir since the earliest generations of Islam to date (Abubakar, 2019; Fuqohak, 2020). The interpretation and the deciphering of the message of the Quran aim not only to understand the contents of the Quran itself but also to implement its message in everyday life (Mawardi, 2020; Thalib, Sabrie, 2020). The diversity of backgrounds and considerations will influence the mufassir in interpreting the marriage verses, for example, the differences in their competency in understanding and mastering the language of the Quran and the variations in interpreting the Ashab al-Nuzul (Mufid, 2020; Wathani, 2020). On the other hand, there is also the influence of their dependency on the school of fiqh (which they subscribed) in their interpretation. Above all, the last-mentioned factor even contributes most to the diversity of their interpretation subjectivity, and at the same time becomes an important highlight in this paper, which will be explained specifically in the next section. The verses which are concerned to are verse 221, 230 232 and 234 of Surah al-Baqarah.

The Comprehension of Fiqh Schools Towards Marriage Verses

The Fiqh schools here are the Hanafi, Maliki, Shafi'i and Hanbali Schools, of which the last three mentioned - henceforth – termed as jumhur fuqaha' (the majority of fuqaha'). The fuqaha selected are, Ibn Hazm, Ibn al Humam, Ibn Rusyd, Kasani and Sayid Sabiq. The following will explain of how the four school fuqaha’ comprehend these verses.

Verse 221 of the Surah Al-Baqarah: Translation: And do not marry polytheistic women until they believe. And a believing slave woman is better than a polytheist, even though she might please you. And do not marry polytheistic men [to your women] until they believe. And a believing slave is better than a polytheist, even though he might please you. Those invite [you] to the Fire, but Allah invites to Paradise and to forgiveness, by His permission. And He makes clear His verses to the people that perhaps they may remember.

According to Sayid Sabiq, (n.d.) and Ibn Rushd (1992) (when explaining the opinion of jumhur fuqaha’), the prohibition in this verse means specifically addressed to the wali, as though Allah said "O guardian, don't you marry women who is under your guardianship with men who are still idolaters". However, Ibn Rushd (1992), when explaining the opinion of Abu Hanifah, argued otherwise. He argued that the prohibition is more likely to be understood as waliyul amri rather than wali. Moreover, there is no further explanation regarding the types of guardians, their nature and degree of marriage guardianship if the prohibition is believed.

Verse 230 of the Surah Al-Baqarah: Translation: And if he has divorced her [for the third time], then she is not lawful to him afterwards until [after] she marries a husband other than him. And if the latter husband divorces her [or dies], there is no blame upon the woman and her former husband for returning to each other if they think that they can keep [within] the limits of Allah. These are the limits of Allah, which He makes clear to a people who know.

When explaining the jumhur fuqaha’ opinions, Ibn Hazm, (n.d.) said that this verse means a marriage without wali is invalid. However, Sayed Sabiq (1971) and Ibn al Humam (n.d.), when explaining the opinion of Abu Hanifah, argued otherwise. They believed this verse is about marriage, which is closely related to women. They argued that linking a matter to the subject shows that the person is the main subject and is also more entitled to handle the matter compared to others.

Verse 232 of the Surah Al-Baqarah: Translation: And when you divorce women and they have fulfilled their term, do not prevent them from remarrying their [former] husbands if they agree among themselves on an acceptable basis. That is instructed to whoever of you believes in Allah and the Last Day. That is better for you and purer, and Allah knows and you know not.

Sayed Sabiq (1971), explaining the opinions of jumhur fuqaha', commented that the prohibition on the word prevent here specifically intended for the wali. This is in line with the occasion of revelation (asbab an-nuzul), which will be explained further later. However, Al Kasani (1910), when explaining the opinion of Abu Hanifa, had the opposite views. According to him, the prohibition here is more general because several possible objectives can be understood from this verse. First, as the concept of jumhur fuqaha' above (provided that this possibility is somewhat more difficult compared to the next two possibilities), the prohibition was addressed to the wali but in a different meaning from what the jumhur fuqaha' maintained above. The point here is about a wali who prevents the women under his guardianship to run their own marriage with the men of her choice. Second, the prohibition in the verse is addressed to the husband, in the sense that the husband is prohibited from hindering his divorced wife while she has finished her 'iddah (waiting period) to marry the man of her choice. This consideration is based on the phrase "If you divorce your wife" at the beginning of the verse.

Verse 234 of the Surah Al-Baqarah: Translation: And those who are taken in death among you and leave wives behind - they, [the wives, shall] wait four months and ten [days]. And when they have fulfilled their term, then there is no blame upon you for what they do with themselves in an acceptable manner. And Allah is [fully] acquainted with what you do.

Ibn Hazm (n.d.), when explaining the opinion of jumhur fuqaha', said that the prohibition in this verse is addressed to the wali. It is as if Allah said, “Guardians, do not obstruct a woman whom her husband has died and has finished his iddah (a waiting period) from marrying another man in a way that is Makruf (familiar)”. This comprehension is different from the Hanafi school, which maintains that an akad nikah (hereafter marriage contract) carried out by the woman herself and the man of her choice and blessed with mithil dowry is included in the makruf concept in this verse. Therefore, the marriage should be considered valid, because it includes the act of makruf, which is in accordance with the will of the wali (Kasani, 1910).

The above explanation shows that, following jumhur fuqaha', the marriage matter will be considered makruf if it handed entirely to the wali. However, the Hanafi school believes vice versa, that this matter will not be considered makruf if it is not handed to the women.

The Function and the Degree of Hadith Toward the Generality of Marriage Verses

This discussion is necessary to clarify the function and the degree of the hadith toward several marriage verses. The selected hadiths are the ones narrated from Abu Musa, Aisha ra, and from Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiq. The chosen hadiths narrators are Ahmad al-Sahar Nafuri, Al-Nawawi, Baihaqi, Ibn al Humam, Ibn Qayyim al-Jauziyyat, Mubarakfuri, Muhammad Zakariya and Zarqani. Among the hadith is the hadith of Abu Musa, the Matan (text of hadith) is according to al-Turmuzi (Mubarakfuri, n.d.). Translation: from Abu Musa he said: The Messenger of Allah. said: "There is no legal marriage without a wali". This hadith was narrated from Ahmad, Abu Daud, al Turmuizi, Ibn Majah and Hakim. The Sanad (or Isnad) of the hadith (the hadith’s chain of transmitters) can be seen in Figure 1.

Al-Turuzi considered this hadith is hasan sahih, although other scholars of hadith have different opinions about its validity due to several indicators. First, al-Turuzi considers all reports based on Abu Ishaq is sahih (valid), except for the history of Syu'bah and al-Sauri. According to him, the objection to the two men is because both of them coincided with time and place when they heard the hadith from Abu Ishaq; therefore, the validity of the hadith is doubtful. Secondly, al-Turuzi also acknowledged the weakness of the narration of the hadith which did not rely on Abu Ishaq but directly to Abu Burdah, which means that his sanad was interrupted. Third, there is an error of sanad in the narration of Abu Dawud: Yunus, Ismail and Abu Burdah are from one narration, then Yunus and Ismail jointly narrating the hadith from Abu Ishaq, as if, there are two Burdah in the sanad. Yet, as it is seen in the Sanad al-Turuzi, there is only one Abu Burdah (Nafuri, n.d.; Ibn Qayyim, n.d.; Mubarakfuri, n.d.).

Next is the hadith from Aisha, which the matan (content/text of hadith) is from Abu Dawood: (Nafuri, n.d.) Translation: Aishah ra., narrated that the Messenger of Allah said: "Whoever woman married without the permission of her wali her marriage is invalid, her marriage is invalid, her marriage is invalid. If he entered into her, then the Mahr is for her in lieu of what he enjoyed from her private part. If they disagree, then the Sultan is the wali for one who has no wali". This hadith was narrated by Ahmad, Abu Dawood and Ibn Majah.

The sanad of the hadith can be seen in Figure 2. Al-Turuzi considered this hadith to be hasan (good), even Ibn Hibban and the Hakim judged it as Shahih (valid), even though the scholars of other hadith still doubted its validity. That doubt was found in the narration of Zuhri and the statement was very popular among the scholars of hadith. On one hand, Ibn Juraij, in one narration, had met Zuhri and questioned about the hadith, then he answered, "I do not know". Such answer according to the hadith scholar can weaken the validity of the narration (Baihaqi, n.d.; Qayyim, n.d.; Mubarakfuri, n.d.). However, al-Turuzi, Ibn Hibban and Hakim - to refute these doubts - still considered that the event did not affect the validity of the hadith because none of other hadith scholars narrated the story of Ibn Juraij, except Ibn Ulayyah himself. Whereas, this hadith is narrated by a group of hadith experts from Zuhri, but they did not mention that the explanation is from him. Even though the statement is true, it cannot be used as the reason to weaken this hadith, because the person narrated it from Zuhri was an honest individual, including Sulaiman Ibn Musa (Baihaqi, n.d.; Qayyim, n.d.; Mubarakfuri, n.d.). This statement is ungrounded, because basically they acknowledged the incident, therefore, the validity of the hadith is in doubt.
On the other hand, the scholar of hadith also found the issue about the validity of the hadith. Ibn Qayyim (n.d.), a Sunan Abi Dawud explainer - through his narration from al-Qa'naby - said that Jakfar (Ibn Rabi'ah) had never heard this hadith from Zuhri. This statement is also supported by the statement of al-Baihaqy (n.d.) from Ibn Mu'in, that the narration from Ibn Rabi'ah is considered weak due to his personal character. Moreover, he added that Zuhri was considered to deny his narration by saying "If a woman marries without her wali's consent, it is permissible". This opinion is held by Al-Sya'by, Abu Hanifah and Zufar. Ahmad al-Sahar Nafuri (n.d.), a Sunan Abi Dawood explainer, – in relation to this matter – also clarified that: the flaw of the hadith is not only due to the narration doubt about Zuhri as mentioned above, but also because this narration is contrary to his own practice, namely the hadith about the marriage of his brother's son (Hafsah bint Abd Rahman with Munzir Ibn Zuber), which will be explained afterward.

Both of the hadith above are considered weak, either in its sanad or matan. The weaknesses in terms of sanad sometimes is due to the disconnection of sanad between one narrator with the other narrators, as found in the Burdah of the hadith from Abu Musa, or between one narrator and the other narrators do not know about its narration as in the hadith from Aisha. While the weakness in terms of matan is sometimes caused by the conflicts between one hadith and another, such as the practice of Aisha ra. From the hadith of Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiqi which will be explained later which is contrary to his own hadith and as in the hadith of Abu Musa about requiring guardians in marriage.

Build upon the evaluations above, both of these hadith are appeared to be weak. Therefore, the Hasan Shahih level given by al-Turmuzi, and Shahih level given by Ibn Hibban and Hakim is considered too high for these hadith. It is supposed to be downgraded to a lower level and need a further research on it (Ja’far, 2020).

The last one is the hadith from Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiq, with the matan is based on Imam Malik (Zakariya, n.d.) Translation: From Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiq that Aisha, the wife of the Prophet Muhammad, married the Hafsah bint Abdul Rahman with Munzir Ibn Zuber on the matter that he (Abd Rahman) was in the land of Sham. When he came, he was upset about Aisha's actions, then Aisha told the problem to Munzir Ibn Zuber. let the problem be solved by Abd Rahman, Munzir answered. After that Abd Rahman said: I have never rejected Ayesha's wisdom. Based on that, Hafsah (took a stand for) remained with Munzir, and there was no divorce. This hadith was narrated by Malik from Abd Rahman ibn Qasim.

No detailed explanation was found regarding the sanad of this hadith. However, the dissent of the hadith scholars is arousing around the understanding of matan hadith itself. According to al-Bakhy, as explained by Muhammad Zakariya (n.d.), there are two possible meaning of this hadith. First, Aisha herself pronounced the marriage contract, but, this narration was refuted by Ibn Muzayyan, as it contradicted the practice of the Madinah clerics (amal al-Madinah), because Imam Malik himself and a number of other fuqaha’ did not allow women to become a marriage guardians. Second, Aisha's attitude towards the marriage was only to stipulate the dowry and other needs, not as a guardian. It is possible that the guardian of the marriage was one of the close relatives of Hafsah. However, there is no further explanation about the guardian in this marriage. This information shows that because the two narrations were not mentioned concretely, it is scientifically difficult to maintain the truth of the narration.

Furthermore, al-Baakhy, as explained by Muhammad Zakariya (n.d.), argued that according to the Maliki school, the marriage between Hafsah Abd Rahman and Munzir Ibn Zuber (whom her father, Abd Rahman, was far away in Sham at that time) is not allowed at all. Besides, Hafsah was still a virgin and her father was alive at the time of the marriage held.

Al-Zarqani (n.d.), who is also an explainer of the Muwatta book, denied al-Bakhy's information, arguing that Aisha's actions was considered legitimate and there was no one to represent her, and her privilege as the wife of Rasulullah PBUH. Although the wali is far away, the guardianship in marriage is necessary, even if the wali is not the wife of Rasulullah PBUH. If the marriage carried out by Aisha was true and an example of a marriage that was guarded by a woman because it was Aisha's privilege as the wife of the Prophet; the questions are why some scholars never considered her as guardian in marriage and how to deal with hadiths related to the marriage guardianship which also originated from Aisha herself? Textually, it can be said that there are two contradicting cases committed by the same person; on one hand, Aisha is presupposed only the men as wali in marriage yet on the other hand, she herself through her practice (marrying Hafsah with Munzir) acknowledged the acquisition of women as a wali in the marriage.

Based on the previous analyses, it can be concluded that their dissent in comprehending the matan of the hadith is because the lafaz (the pronunciation) of the hadith is too general. The jumhur fuqaha' preferences of the first opinion - the best guess- because the hadiths related to marriage (that is mentioned above) are considered as pentakhsis (as specialization) for the generality of the former hadith.

Conversely, the Hanafi School preferred the second opinion because the hadiths were not served to explain the generality of this hadith-because the validity of the sanad is in doubt. They argued what was done by Aisha (which was approved by all scholars, including jumhur fuqaha') was one of the causes of the weakness of the hadith (about a wali must be a man in marriage guardianship) - to be used as a source of law. Hanafi even assumed that Aisha's hadith about the marriage of Hafsah and Munzir was a nasikh (abrogation) of Aisha's aforementioned hadith or at least could be considered as inkar rawi (the denial on the hadith narrator) in the Mushthalah hadith (science about hadith) (Humam, n.d.; Mubarakfuri, n.d.). In addition, the scholars are still debating the validity of the sanad of hadith. Also, to comply to the general dalil (propositions) in determining the law is better than specific arguments that are weak.

Referring back to the hadiths which jumhur fuqaha' assume to be the dalil for the existence of a wali in a marriage, the Hanafi school considered the opposite. The Hanafi school believed that the validity of these hadiths are questionable, both in terms of matan and sanad. The flaw in terms of matan is sometimes caused by inkar rawi between one hadith and another, such as the practice of Aisha (Prophet's wife).

Likewise, for the hadith from Abu Musa and Aisha, the weaknesses of these two hadiths are not only because they contradict the Aisha's practice –in the event of marriage of Hafsah bnt Abd Rahman and Munzir Ibn Zubair, and at that time Abd Rahman was in Bilaad as Sham - but also because the validity of the sanad of both hadiths are still debatable.

Regarding the hadith of marriage guardianship, the jumhur fuqaha comprehensions tend to interpret the hadith textually rather than contextually. This is because they concerned more on interpreting the proposition (dalil) of the text and disregard other probabilities. For example, when comprehending the verses, they are more influenced by the meaning of the text of hadiths of marriage guardianship, even implicitly it can be said that there is an assumption from jumhur fuqaha' that these hadith are served to specifically explain the general marriage verses.

On the other hand, the way of understanding adopted by the Hanafi school in studying texts, both the Quran and the hadith, is quite different from the pattern adopted by jumhur fuqaha. The subject of the study is more directed toward the understanding of the texts as a whole, with the condition that not only to pay attention to the various possibilities that occur between one text to another, but also to put the concern on the intent or illat included. For example, the meaning and illat are adjusted to the circumstance and situation of the community. Such thinking is more directed towards comprehension which considers the reason or illat of the law itself, in addition to manifesting benefit rather than just explaining the meaning in the text alone (Umar, 2020).

Interpretation of Verses Understood by Scholars of The Four Schools of Fiqh

The mufassirs selected in this case were Al-Qurthubi, Al-Thabari, Ibn al-‘Arabi Abu Bakar Al-Jashsas and Rasyid Ridha, assuming that their interpretation can represent the four schools of fiqh. Mufassir focused on two main subjects to understand the message behind those Quranic verses: the background of revelation and the literal meaning in those verses. First, the particular verse investigated in relation to its background of revelation is the verse that is more related to the issue of marriage guardianship. In addition, the scope of meaning and message in those verses are discussed.

According to several exegesis (tafseer) books, of the four aforementioned verses, the background of the revelation of verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah is the most related to this issue. Imam Al- Thabari (1954) outlined several narrations concerning its background of revelation and one that is deemed credible is the one involving Ma’qil Ibnu Yasar, who prevented his divorced sister to return (ruj’u) to her husband.

This is in line with the hadith narrated by Abu Dawud as follows: Translation: From Al-Hasan, that Ma’qil said, I have a sister which is dear to me, and when the son of my uncle came, then I gave her away to him and he divorced her once and did not take her back until her waiting period (iddah) finished. Then when I was going to give her away, her former husband came back and want to remarry her, to whom I said: “By Allah, she will never return to you” and thus that verse was revealed...He said I pay expiation for oath and I gave her away back to him for marriage. This hadith was narrated by Bukhari and Abu Dawood.

Mufassir agreed to determine that that hadith was the reason why verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah was revealed. However, they differ in the interpretation of the background of revelation and the interpretation of the verse itself. Al-Qurthubi (1967) maintained that the verse was revealed in connection to wali based on the interpretation of another verse that wali is prohibited to hand his daughters under his guardianship to a polytheist man. This argument is supported by Ahmad al-Sahar Nafuri (n.d.) who stated that this hadith counts as hadith that prescribes the existence of a wali in a marriage. Abubakar Al-Jashsas (n.d.) disagreed that the verse was revealed exclusively in relation to wali. He believed it is difficult to justify such an opinion since the prohibition has a general context which involves all parties, including the husband. This opinion is shared by Rasyid Ridha (n.d.) who believed that although the verse was revealed for a specific reason, it has a general application nonetheless, including the former husband who prevents his divorced wife to marry another man of her choice. The difference in interpretation will be outlined in the interpretation of verse 232.

According to Ibn al-‘Arabi (1950), the word nikah in verse 230 has two meanings, namely marriage contract (explicitly) and sexual intercourse (implicitly) (Khanif, 2019; Armia, 2017). Supposed that one adopts the first meaning, then it means a woman is allowed to give herself and others away in marriage because the word nikah is directly tied to her. On the contrary, if the latter meaning was adopted, it means women will never be allowed to give herself and others away in marriage. This is because the verse does not literally state so. In this case, he adopted the implicit meaning (general interpretation is based on the explicit meaning), arguing that the hadiths concerning marriage tend to support such opinions. In contrast, al-Jashsas (n.d.) believed that the verse should be interpreted based on its explicit meaning (instead of the implicit meaning). In fact, it is the meaning of such nature that is intended by the verse. In support of his claim, he pointed out two strings of words in the verse, first; “until after she marries a husband other than him”, which means the woman herself in the pronouncement of the marriage contract and, second; “there is no blame upon the woman and her husband for returning to each other” which is interpreted that a divorced couple have the right to return to their former marriage without involving a wali. In fact, the word wali, as intended here, not only includes men but also women. The differences of the interpretation of the implicit and explicit meaning are influenced by the schools of fiqh they subscribed.

Concerning the interpretation of verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah, mufassir agreed to interpret the word “prevent” in “do not prevent them from remarrying their (former husbands or other men)” to mean “to hinder, prevent and make it difficult”. However, their opinions differ when determining the prohibition in that verse. Ibn al-‘Arabi (1950) argued that the verse is related to wali who are prohibited against preventing women under their guardianship to marry men of their choice. Preventing from marriage here means that the wali is not willing to solemnize the marriage. If women had rights to give themselves away, there would not be any prohibition against the prevention in that verse. However, Al-Jashsas (n.d.) maintained a conflicting opinion stating that the verse serves as the main argument allowing women to handle and run their own marriage, in addition to other supporting verses. In fact, he rejected the opinion saying that women have no right whatsoever in pronouncing the marriage contract.
There are two strings of words in the verse used to support this opinion. The first one is “do not prevent them from remarrying their (former husbands or other men)” of which he interpreted to mean that women must not be prevented to pronounce their own marriage contract with men of their choice. The second one is the word “al ma‘ruf”, which is defined as equality of equivalence, and mahr al-mithl. From the concepts of those two groups, he concluded that “no one has the right to prevent a marriage contract which a woman pronounce herself based on the principle of equality or equivalence and one which involves the giving of the mahr al-mithl”. Had the prohibition been imposed on wali, it would have meant that a wali will have the right to cancel the marriage only through a judge; if the woman did not marry a man equal to her or the man did not give her mahr al-mithl.

The difference of interpretation among the mufassir occurs they associated the word nikah with different things. Al-Jashsas associated the word nikah with women with a consideration of the two strings of words mentioned above and, thus, the interpretation takes on a broader meaning. On the other hand, the other mufassir associated the word nikah with wali, and, therefore, wali has the right to solemnize the marriage. This latter understanding is more closely related to that of the majority of fiqh scholars, while the former opinion tends to be popular among Hanafi scholars.

Concerning verse 234 of Surah Al-Baqarah, the most important part that mufassir refer to in understanding this verse is the sentence “There is no blame upon you for what they do with themselves in an acceptable manner”. Al-Thabari (1954), Ibn al-‘Arabi (1950) and al-Qurthuby (1967) agreed to determine that the prohibition in “there is no blame upon you (wali)” are specifically directed towards wali. Similarly, the sentence “for what they do with themselves” means marriage and the words “in an acceptable manner” means every lawful matters in Islam in relation to marriage, such as the choosing of a future husband, determination of dowry, etc., except for running the marriage contract since that is the right of a wali. As a matter of fact, the explanation offered by the three mufassir indicates that it is unacceptable and contradictory to the verse to let women take care of their own marriage.

On the contrary, al-Jashsas (n.d.) stated that the generality of the verse covers the marriage contract performed by women. The words “there is no blame upon you for what they do with themselves in an acceptable manner” can still be interpreted as there is no right for wali to interfere with matters related to the woman until she completes her iddah (including the pronouncement of marriage contract) as long as they are permissible in the Islamic law. The fact that male wali (guardian) is required in the marriage contract contradicts the intention of this verse. The opinion which holds that in a marriage contract a woman’s only rights are to choose the husband and determine the amount of dowry but not to handle her own marriage is rejected since wali cannot solemnize the marriage without the consent of the woman. The choosing of a husband and determination of a dowry will mean nothing if the marriage fail to take place.

Forms of Mufassir Subjectivity towards Schools of Fiqh in the Interpretation of Marriage Verses

There are four forms of possible subjectivity that mufassir have towards fiqh schools in interpreting marriage verses. The first indication lies in the difference of mufassir opinions in interpreting the background of revelation of verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah in relation to Ma’qil Ibn Yasar. Mufassir from the majority of fiqaha interpreted that the verse was revealed in regard to wali. Therefore, matters concerning marriage should be handed over entirely to wali. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi school interpreted the background of revelation to concern the wali but they also believed the verse has a general application. Therefore, the marriage guardianship can also be handled by women.

Another indication is in their disagreement with the definition of the word nikah, which is a crucial concept to clarify in interpreting a number of verses on marriage. The mufassir from the majority of fiqh scholars always associated the word nikah with wali, and therefore believed that matters about marriage should be taken care of by wali (Soraya, 2016), not others. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi school did not associate the word exclusively with wali and therefore maintain that matters concerning marriage can be handled by any parties, including women.

The next indication is in how they differ in the positioning of the function and degree of the hadith in relation to Quran. Mufassir from the majority of scholars believed that the command and prohibition in several marriage verses were directed towards wali, thus, they also believed that several hadiths on nikah (aforementioned) serve to explain the generality of the verse in more details, except for the hadith on Aisha who acted as a wali in a marriage, which they considered against the law. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi school considered that the command and prohibition in the marriage verses have a general application, including to women, thus they maintained that those hadith do not serve to explain the verses in detail. That is because they argued that those hadiths have flaws in terms of sanad (chain of narration) and the content itself.

The last indication is concerned with the difference in how they attributes the importance of relationship between verses and hadiths in helping them make their interpretation. Mufassir from the majority of scholars did not put great importance toward the relationship. Therefore, their interpretation is more partial and disconnected to each other, and the accuracy is also difficult to justify. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi school considered the relationship important. As a result, their interpretations are more coherent, cohesive and it is relatively easier to justify the accuracy of their interpretation in comparison to the former (Khudhur, 2020). These differences in interpretation may be influenced by the schools of fiqh they subscribed.
Conclusion
There are four forms of mufassir's subjective indications to the fiqh school they subscribed: First, when the mufassir differed in interpreting the Asbab al-Nuzul of surah al-Baqarah verse 232 concerning Ma'qil Ibnu Yasar. The mufassir of jumhur fuqaha' maintained that the occasion the verse revelation is specifically addressed to the wali (not someone else), then the marriage guardianship must be handed entirely to the wali. Meanwhile, the mufassir of Hanafi school maintained that the cause of the verse revelation is specifically addressed to the wali, but they assume that the law is generally accepted, thus, the marriage guardianship may also be handled by women.

The second indication is in their disagreement concerning the word nikah, the key concept to clarify the marriage verses. The mufassir of jumhur fuqaha' associated the word nikah to the wali, then it is the wali who has the right to solemnize the marriage, not others. Otherwise, the mufassir of Hanafi school did not associate the word nikah to the wali, then the marriage matters might be handled by any parties including women.

The third indication lies in difference of mufassir’s opinion in positioning the function and the degree of the hadith toward the Quran itself. The mufassir of jumhur fuqaha’ considered that the generality of the commands or prohibitions in the marriage verses are addressed to the wali, thus some of the marriage hadith (aforementioned) are served to explain the generality of the verses in detail. On the other hand, the mufassir of Hanafi school maintained that the generality of the commands or prohibitions in the verses apply to all, including women, then these hadith are not served to explain the generality of the verses. That is because they think that those hadiths have flaws in terms of sanad (chain of narration) and the content itself.

The last indication is concerned with their dissent in how they attribute to the importance of munasabat (correlation) between verses and hadiths in helping them in their interpretation. The mufassirs of jumhur fuqaha’ considered the correlation is less important, hence their interpretation is more partial, disconnected to each other and its accuracy is rather difficult to justify. Conversely, the mufassir of Hanafi school believed that the correlation is important, as a result, their interpretations are more coherent, cohesive and it is relatively easier to justify the accuracy of their interpretation compared to the former.

Finally, it is hope that the schools, mufassir and muhaddith in studying and analysing the problems occurred and developed should not be subjective in defending the truth of one opinion, or even to blame other opinions that are not in line with the opinions held. That is because an objective truth is difficult to achieve in such practices.

Abstract

There are Aa number of the Quran verses and the hadith of the Prophet PBUHSAW relating to marriage has a which general the meaning of the words are general and apply to all parties. The Fuqaha’ (Islamic law scholars/Jurist) of four schools and mufassir (Qur’an interpreter) who are of the same school (m\text{\textit{Ma}}z\text{\textit{h}}ab), agree to determine the generality of the meaning of several marriage verses to be applied for all without limiting the certain parties. The difference in their opinions is related to the meaning of the word nikah, which is the main subject to understand and interpret the verses. The jumhur (majority) of \textit{\textit{F}}uqaha’ and mufassir who are of the same school always associate the word marriage to the wali (Guardian) so that he must handle the matter concerning in regard to the marriage must be handed entirely to him. On the other hand, mufassir from Hanafi school argue that the word nikah applies to a broader meaning and is not exclusively addressed to wali, so the marriage guardianship can be handled to any parties, including women. The difference in their opinions among of the mufassir in determining the general and specific meaning of the verse are influenced by the background of the school which they followed subscribed. This article paper aims to look further investigate at the subjectivity forms of mufassir to their fiqh school in interpreting the marriage verses. The forms of subjectivity referred to might occur because; the difference views of mufassir in interpreting the Asbab al-Nuzul (the occasion of revelation), the difference in mufassir’s comprehension towards the interpretation of the word nikah which is considered as the key concept in the interpretation of marriage verses. The subjectivity might also be caused by difference views in positioning the hadith as specialization tool to the marriage verses that are still general, and also because the factor of their dissent in evaluating the importance of the munasabah (correlation) between the verses and hadith about marriage in helping them interpret make the interpretation.

Key words: Subjectivity in School, \textit{Mufassir} and Marriage Verse

I. PREFACE

The Qur’an as the first and foremost source of law in Islam is continuously interpreted and deciphered by the \textit{\textit{F}}uqaha’ and mufassir since the earliest generations of Islam until contemporary times. The interpretation and the deciphering of the message of the Qur’an aim not only to understand the contents of the Qur’an itself, but also to implement its message in everyday life. The diversity of backgrounds and considerations will influence opinions will predispose the mufassir in interpreting the marriage verses. For example, in one hand, the differences in their competency in understanding and mastering the language of the Quran and the variations in interpreting the Ashab \textit{al-Nuzul}. And on the other hand, there is also the influence of their dependency on the school of fiqh...
(which they subscribed) in their interpretation. Above all, the last-mentioned factor even contributes most to the diversity of their interpretation, subjectivity of their interpretation, and at the same time becomes an important highlight in this paper, which will be explained specifically in the next section. The verses which are concerned to are the verse 221, 230 232 and 234 of Surah al-Baqarah.

II. DISCUSSION

The Comprehension of Fiqh Schools' Comprehension Towards Marriage Verses.

The Fiqh schools referred to here are the Hanafi, Maliki, Shafi'i and Hanbali Schools, of which the last three mentioned - henceforth – termed as jumhur fiqaha’ (the majority of fiqaha’). The fiqaha’ who were selected here are, Ibn Hazm, Ibn al Humam, Ibn Rusyd, Kasani and Sayid Sabiq.

The following will explain of how the four school fiqaha’ comprehend these verses.

Verse 221 of the Surah Al-Baqarah

Translation: And do not marry polytheistic women until they believe. And a believing slave woman is better than a polytheist, even though she might please you. And do not marry polytheistic men [to your women] until they believe. And a believing slave is better than a polytheist, even though he might please you. Those invite [you] to the Fire, but Allah invites to Paradise and to forgiveness, by His permission. And He makes clear His verses to the people that perhaps they may remember.

According to Sayid Sabiq (p. 7) and Ibn Rusyd (p. 9) (when explaining the opinion of jumhur fiqaha’), the prohibition in this verse means specifically addressed to the wali, as though Allah said “O guardian, don't you marry women who is under your guardianship with men who are still idolaters”. However, Ibn Rushd (p. 11), when explaining the opinion of Abu Hanifah, argued otherwise. He argued that the prohibition is more likely to be understood as waliyal amri rather than wali. Moreover, there is no further explanation regarding the types of guardians, their nature and degree of marriage guardianship if indeed such prohibition is believed.

Verse 230 of the Surah Al-Baqarah

Translation: And if he has divorced her [for the third time], then she is not lawful to him afterwards until [after] she marries a husband other than him. And if the latter husband divorces her [or dies], there is no blame upon the woman and her former husband for returning to each other if they think that they can keep [within] the limits of Allah. These are the limits of Allah, which He makes clear to a people that know.

When explaining the jumhur fiqaha’ opinions, ibn Hazm (p. 457) said that this verse means a marriage without wali is invalid. However, Sayid Sabiq (p. 14) and ibn Humam (p. 257-258), when explaining the opinion of Abu Hanifah, argued otherwise. They believed According to them, this verse is about marriage, which is closely related to women. They argued that linking a matter to the subject shows that the person is the main subject and is also more entitled to handle the matter compared to others.

Verse 232 of the Surah Al-Baqarah.

Translation: And when you divorce women and they have fulfilled their term, do not prevent them from remarrying their [former] husbands if they agree among themselves on an acceptable basis. That is instructed to whoever of you believes in Allah and the Last Day. That is better for you and purer, and Allah knows and you know not.

Sayed Sabiq (p. 7-8), explaining the opinions of jumhur fuqaha', commented that the prohibition on the word prevent here specifically intended for the wali. This is in line accordance with the occasion of revelation (ashab an-nuzul), which will be explained further later. His statement is in regard to the Jumhur Fuqaha'. However, Al-Kasani (p. 247), when explaining the opinion of Abu Hanifa, had the the opposite views the opposite. According to him, the prohibition here is more general because there are several possible objectives that can be understood from this verse. First, as the concept of jumhur fuqaha’ above (provided that this possibility is somewhat more difficult compared to the next two possibilities), the prohibition was addressed to the wali but in a different meaning from what the jumhur fuqaha’ maintained above. The point here is about a wali who prevents the women under his guardianship to run their own marriage with the men of her choice. Second, the prohibition contained in the verse is addressed to the husband, in the sense that the husband is prohibited from hindering his divorced wife while she has finished her ‘iddah (waiting period) to marry the man of hers choice. This consideration is based on the phrase "If you divorce your wife" which contained at the beginning of the verse.

Verse 234 of the Surah Al-Baqarah.

Translation: And those who are taken in death among you and leave wives behind - they, [the wives, shall] wait four months and ten [days]. And when they have fulfilled their term, then there is no blame upon you for what they do with themselves in an acceptable manner. And Allah is [fully] acquainted with what you do.

Ibn Hazm (p. 459), when explaining the opinion of jumhur fuqaha’, -said that yes the prohibition contained in this verse is addressed to the wali. It is as if Allah said, “Guardians, do not obstruct a woman whom her husband has died and has finished his iddah (a waiting period) from marrying another man in a way that is Makruf (familiar)”. This comprehension is different from the Hanafi school, which maintains that an akad nikah (hereafter marriage contract) which is carried out by the woman herself and the man of her choice and is blessed with mithil dowry is included in the makruf concept in this verse. Therefore, the marriage should be considered valid, because it includes the act of makruf, which is in accordance with the will of the wali. (Al-Kasani, p. 248).

The above explanation above shows that, following according to Jumhur Fiqaha, the marriage matter will be considered makruf if it handed entirely to the wali. However, the Hanafi school believes vice versa, that this matter will not be considered makruf if it is not handed to the women.

The Function and the Degree of Hadith Toward the Generality of Marriage Verses.

This discussion is necessary to clarify the function and the degree of the hadith toward several marriage verses. The selected hadiths here are the ones which were narrated from Abu Musa, Aisha, and from Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiq. The chosen hadiths narrators are Ahmad al-Sahar Nafuri, Al-Nawawi, Baihaqi, Ibn al Humam, Ibn Qayyim al-Jauziyyat, Mubarakfuri, Muhammad Zakariya and Zarqani. Among the hadith is the hadith of Abu Musa, the Matan (text of hadith) is according to al-Turmuzi (Al-Mubarakfury, p. 229).

Translation: from Abu Musa he said: The Messenger of Allah. said: "There is no legal marriage without a wali". This hadith was narrated from Ahmad, Abu Daud, al Turmuzi, Ibn Majah and Hakim.

The Sanad (or Isnad) of the hadith (the hadith’s chain of transmitters) can be seen in Figure 1, below.
Al-Tirmidzi considered this hadith is hasan sahih, although other scholars of hadith have different opinions about its validity due to several indicators. First, al-Tirmidzi considers all reports based on Abu Ishaq is shahih (valid), except for the history of Syu'bah and al-Sauri. According to him, the objection to the two men is because both of them coincided with time and place when they heard the hadith from Abu Ishaq; therefore, the validity of the hadith is doubtful. Secondly, al-Tirmidzi also acknowledged the weakness of the narration of the hadith which did not rely on Abu Ishaq but directly to Abu Burdah, which means that his sanad was interrupted. Third, there is an error of sanad in the narration of Abu Dawud: Yunus, Ismail and Abu Burdah are from one narration, then Yunus and Ismail jointly narrating the hadith from Abu Ishaq, as if, there are two Burdah in the sanad. Yet, as it is seen in the Sanad al-Tirmidzi there is only one Abu Burdah (al-Mubarakfury, p. 230; Ibn Qayyim al-Jauziyyat, p. 102 and Ahmad al-Sahar Nafuri, p. 82).

The next is the hadith from Aisha, which the matan (content/text of hadith) is from Abu Dawood: (Ahmad al-Shar Nafuri, p. 79).

Translation: Aishah ra., narrated that the Messenger of Allah said: "Whichever woman married without the permission of her wali her marriage is invalid, her marriage is invalid, her marriage is invalid, her marriage is invalid. If he entered into her, then the Mahr is for her in lieu of what he enjoyed from her private part. If they disagree, then the Sultan is the wali for one who has no wali”. This hadith was narrated by Ahmad, Abu Dawood and Ibn Majah.

The sanad of the hadith can be seen in Figure 2. Al-Turmuzi considered this hadith to be hasan (good), even Ibn Hibban and the Hakim judged it as Shahih (valid), even though the scholars of other hadith still doubted its validity. That doubt was found in the narration of Zuhri and the statement was very popular among the scholars of hadith. On one hand, Ibn Juraij, in one narration, had met Zuhri and questioned about the hadith, then he answered, "I do not know". Such answer according to the hadith scholar can weaken the validity of the narration (Al-Mubarakfuri, p. 228; al-Baihaqi, p. 106 and Ibn Qayyim al-Jauziyyat, p. 99). However, al-Turmuzi, Ibn Hibban and Hakim - to refute these doubts - still considered that the event did not affect the validity of the hadith because this is due to none of the other hadith scholars who narrated the story of Ibn Juraij, except Ibn Ulayyah himself. Whereas, this hadith is narrated by a group of hadith experts from Zuhri, but they did not mention that the explanation is from him. Even though the statement is true, it still cannot be used as the reason to weaken this hadith, because the person who narrated it from Zuhri was an honest individual, including Sulaiman Ibn Musa (Al-Mubarakfuri, p. 229; Al-Baihaqy, pp. 206 and 206). Ibn Qayyim Al Jauziyyat, p. 99). This statement is ungrounded, because basically they acknowledged the incident, therefore, the validity of the hadith is in doubt.

On the other hand, the scholars of hadith also found the spotlight about the validity of the Hadith. Ibn Qayyim al-Jauziyyat (p. 101), a Sunan Abi Dawud explainer - through his narration from al-Qa‘naby - said that Jakfar (Ibn Rabî‘ah) had never heard this Hadith from Zuhri. This statement is also supported by the statement of al-Baihaqy (p. 108) from Ibn Mu‘in, that the narration from Ibn Rabî‘ah is considered weak due to his personal character. Moreover, he added that Zuhri was considered to deny his narration by saying "If a woman marries without her wali’s consent, it is permissible". This opinion is held by Al-Sya‘by, Abu Hanifah and Zufar. Ahmad Al-Sahar Nafuri (p. 85), a Sunan Abi Dawood explainer, – in relation to this matter – also clarified that: The flaw of the Hadith is not only due to the narration doubt about Zuhri as mentioned above, but also because this narration is contrary to his own practice, namely the hadith about the marriage of his brother’s son (Hafsah bnt Abd Rahman with Munzir Ibn Zuber), which will be explained afterward.

Both of the hadith above are considered weak, either in its sanad or matan. The weaknesses in terms of sanad sometimes is due to the disconnection of sanad between one narrator with the other narrators, as found in the Burdah of the Hadith from Abu Musa, or between one narrator and the other narrators do not know about its narration as in the Hadith from Aisha. While the weakness in terms of matan is sometimes caused by the conflicts between one hadith and another, such as the practice of Aisha ra. From the hadith of Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiqi (which will be explained later), which is contrary to his own hadith and as in the hadith of Abu Musa about requiring guardians in marriage.

Build upon the evaluations above, both of these hadith are appeared to be weak. Therefore, the Hasan Shahih level given by al-Turmuzi, and Shahih level given by Ibn Hibban and Hakim is considered too high for these hadith. It is supposed to be downgraded to a lower level and need a further research on it (Interview with Mr. Tarmizi M. Ja'far, 30 April 2020).

The last one is the hadith from Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiqi with the matan is based on Imam Malik (Muhammad Zakaria, P. 40)

Translation: From Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiq that Aisha, the wife of the Prophet Muhammad, married the Hafsah bint Abdul Rahman with Munzir Ibn Zuber on the matter that he (Abd Rahman) was in the land of Sham. When he came, he was upset about Aisha's actions, then Aisha told the problem to Munzir Ibn Zuber, let the problem be solved by Abd Rahman, Munzir answered. After that Abd Rahman said: I have never rejected Ayesha's wisdom. Based on that, Hafsah (took a stand for) remained with Munzir, and there was no divorce. This hadith was narrated by Malik from Abd Rahman ibn Qasim.

No detailed explanation was found regarding the sanad of this hadith. However, the dissent of the hadith scholars is arousing around the understanding of matan hadith itself. According to al-Bakhy, as explained by Muhammad Zakaria (p. 40), there are two possible meaning of the contents of this hadith. First, Aisha herself pronounced the marriage contract, but, this narration was refuted by Ibn Muzayyan, as it contradicts the practice of the Madinah clerics (amal al-Madinah), because Imam Malik himself and a number of other fuqaha did not allow women to become a marriage guardians. Second, Aisha's attitude towards the marriage was only to stipulate the dowry and other needs, not as a guardian. It is possible that the guardian of the marriage was one of the close relatives of Hafsah. However, But there is no further explanation about who was the guardian in this marriage. This information shows that because the two narrations were not mentioned concretely, it is scientifically difficult to maintain the truth of the narration.

Furthermore, al-Baakhy, as explained by Muhammad Zakaria (p. 40), argued that according to the Maliki school, the marriage between Hafsah Abd Rahman and Munzir Ibn Zuber (whom her father was far away in Sham at that time) is not allowed at all. Besides, Hafsah was a virgin and her father was still alive at the time of the marriage was held. Al-Zarqany (p. 172), who is also an explainer of the Muwatta book, denied al-Bakhy's information above, arguing that Aisha's actions was considered legitimate and there was no one to represent her, and because her this is Aisha's privilege as the wife of Rasulullah PbUH Saw. Although the wali is far away, the guardianship in marriage is necessary even if the wali is not the wife of Rasulullah PbUH Saw. If the marriage that was carried out by Aisha was true and it has even been an example of a marriage that was guarded by a woman even though because for the reason that it was Aisha's privilege as the wife of the Prophet; the emerged questions are why some scholars never considered her as guardian in marriage and how to deal with hadiths relating to the marriage guardianship which also originated from Aisha herself? Textually, it can be said that there are two contradicting cases was committed by the same person; on one hand, Aisha is presupposed only the men as wali in marriage yet on the other hand, she herself through her practice (marrying Hafsah with Munzir) acknowledged the acquisition of women as a wali in the marriage (Muhammad Zakaria, p. 40; al-Baihaqi, pp. 112-113 and pp. 112-113 and Ahmad al-Sahar Nafuri, p. 85).

Based on Referring to the previous analysis, it can be concluded that their dissent in comprehending the matan of the hadith is because the lafaz (the pronouncement) of the hadith is too general. The jumhur fuqaha preferences of the first opinion -the best guess- because the hadiths relating to marriage (that is mentioned above) are considered as pentakhsis (as specialization) for the generality of the former hadith.

Conversely, the Hanafi School preferred the second opinion because the hadiths were not served to explain the generality of this hadith-because the validity of the sanad is still in doubt. They argued According to them what was done by Aisha (which her deed was approved by all scholars, including jumhur fuqaha') was one of the causes of the weakness of the hadith (about a wali must be a man in marriage guardianship) - to be used as a source of law. Hanafi even assumed that Aisha's hadith about the marriage of Hafsah and Munzir was a nasikh (abrogation) of Aisha's aforementioned hadith or at least could be considered as inkar rawi (the denial on the hadith narrator) in the Mushthalah h hadith (science about hadith) (Al-Humam. p. 261 and Al-Mubarakfuri, p. 229). In addition, the scholars are still debating the validity to of the position of the sanad of h hadith. Also, which the scholars are still debating about its validity. To comply to the general dalil (propositions) that are general in determining the law is better than specific arguments that are weak.

Referring back to the hadiths which according to jumhur fuqaha' are assumed to be the dalil for the existence of a wali in a marriage, the Hanafi school considered the opposite. The Hanafi school believed that According to them, the validity of these hadiths are is still being questioned, both in terms of matan and sanad. The flaw in terms of matan is sometimes caused by inkar rawi between one hadith and another, such as like the practice of Aisha (Prophet's wife) itself.

It was likewise, for the hadith from Abu Musa and Aisha, the weaknesses of these two hadiths are not only because they contradict the Aisha's practice —in when the event of marriage of Hafsah bnt Abd Rahman and Munzir Ibn Zubair, and who—at that time Abd Rahman was in Bilad as the land of Sham— but also because the validity of both of the sanad of both hadiths are still being debated.

Regarding the hadith of marriage guardianship, the jumhur fuqaha comprehensions tend are prone to interpret the hadith textually rather than contextually. This is because they concerned more on interpreting the proposition (dalil) of the text and disregard other probabilities. For example, when comprehending the verses, they are more influenced by the meaning of the text of hadiths of marriage guardianship, even implicitly it can be said that there is an assumption from jumhur fuqaha’ that these hadith are served to specifically explain the general marriage verses that are general in detail.

On the other hand, the way of understanding which adopted by the Hanafi school in the studying of texts, both the Quran and the Hadith, is quite different from the pattern adopted by jumhur fuqaha-. The subject of the study is more directed toward the understanding of the texts as a whole— with the condition that not only to pay attention to the various possibilities that occur between one text to another, but also to put the concern on the intent or illat which contained there. For example, the meaning and illat are adjusted to the circumstance and situation of the community. Such This kind of thinking is more directed towards comprehension which considers the reason or illat of the law itself, in addition to manifesting benefit rather than just explaining the meaning contained in the text alone (Interview with Mukhsin nya' Umar, 29 April 2020).

Interpretation of Verses Understood by Scholars of The Four Schools of Fiqh

The mufassir selected in this case were Al-Qurthubi, Al-Thabari, Ibn al-'Arabi Abu Bakar Al-Jashsas and Rasyid Ridha, assuming that their interpretation can represent the four schools of Fiqh. Mufassir focused on two main subjects There are two main subjects of focus that the mufassir are looking into to understand the message behind those Quranic verses: the background of revelation and the literal meaning contained in those verses. First, the particular verse that is investigated in relation to its background of revelation is the verse that is more related to the issue of marriage guardianship. In addition, the scope of meaning and message contained in those verses are will be discussed.

According to several exegesis (tafseer) books, of the four aforementioned verses, the background of the revelation of verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah that is the most related to this issue is verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah. Imam Al-Thabari (p. 489) outlined several narrations concerning regarding its background of revelation and one that is deemed credible is the one that which involved Ma’qil Ibnu Yasar, who prevented his divorced sister to return (ruj’u) to her husband.

This is in line with the hadith narrated by Abu Dawud as follows:
Translation: From Al-Hasan, that Ma’qil said, I have a sister which is dear to me, and when the son of my uncle came, then I gave her away to him and he divorced her once and did not take her back until her waiting period (iddah) finished. Then when I was going to give her away, her former husband came back and want to remarry her, to whom I said: “By Allah, she will never return to you” and thus that verse was revealed…He said I pay expiation for oath and I gave her away back to him for marriage. This hadith was narrated by Bukhari and Abu Dawood.

Mufassir agreed to determine that that hadith was the reason why verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah was revealed. However, they differ in the interpretation of the background of revelation and the interpretation of the verse itself.

Al-Qurthubi (pp. 72-73) maintained that the verse was revealed in connection to wali based on the interpretation of another verse that wali isare prohibited to handgive_hisdaughters away_under his guardianship_to a polytheist man. This argument is supported by Ahmad al-Sahar Nafuri (p. 91) who stated that this hadith counts as hadith that which-prescribes the existence of a wali in a marriage, according to scholars who hold the opinion. Abubakar al-Jashsas (p. 101) disagreed that the verse was revealed exclusively in relation to wali. He believed it is difficult to justify such an opinion since the prohibition has a general context which involves all parties, including the husband. This opinion is shared by Rasyid Ridha (pp. 401-402) who believed that although the verse was revealed for a specific reason, it has a general application nonetheless, including the former husband who prevents his divorced wife to marry another man of her choice. The difference in interpretation will be outlined in the interpretation of verse 232.

According to Ibn al-’,Araby (p. 197), the word nikah in verse 230 has takes on two meanings, namely marriage contract (explicitly) and sexual intercourse (implicitly). Supposed that one adopts the first meaning, then it means a woman is allowed to give herself and others away in marriage because the word nikah is directly tied to her. On the contrary, if the latter meaning was adopted, it means women will never be allowed to give herself and others away in marriage. This is because the verse does not literally state so. In this case, he adopted the implicit meaning (generally interpretation is based on the explicit meaning), arguing that the hadiths concerning in relation to marriage tend to support such opinions. In Quite the contrastry, al-Jashsas (p. 101) believed that the verse should be is to be interpreted based on its explicit meaning (instead of the interpretation is usually based on implicit meaning). In fact, it is the meaning of such nature that is intended by the verse. In support of his claim, he pointed out two strings of words in the verse, first; “until after she marries a husband other than him”, which means the woman herself in the pronouncement of the marriage contract and, second; “there is no blame upon the woman and her husband for returning to each other” which is interpreted that a divorced couple have the right to return to their former marriage without involving a wali. In fact, the word wali as intended here not only includes men but also women. The differences of the interpretation of the implicit and explicit meaning are influenced by the schools of Fiqh to which they subscribed.

Concerning the interpretation of verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah, mutaffir agreed to interpret the word “prevent” in “do not prevent them from remarrying their (former husbands or other men)” to mean “to hinder, prevent and make it difficult”. However, their opinions differ. Ibn al-'Araby (p. 197) is of argued the opinion that the verse is related to wali who are prohibited against preventing women under their guardianship to marry men of their choice. Preventing from marriage here means that the wali is not willing to solemnize the marriage. If women had rights to give themselves away, it follows that there would not be any prohibition against the prevention in that verse. However, Al-Jashas (p. 197) maintained a conflicting opinion which states that the verse serves as the main argument allowing women to handle their own marriage, in addition to other supporting verses in support of this. In fact, he rejected the opinion saying that women have no right whatsoever in pronouncing the marriage contract. There are two strings of words in the verse used to support this opinion. The first one is “do not prevent them from remarrying their (former husbands or other men)” of which he interpreted to mean that women must not be prevented to pronounce their own marriage contract with men of their choice. The second one is the word “al ma'ruf”, which is defined as equality of equivalence, and mahru al-mithl. From the concepts of those two groups, he concluded that “no one has the right to prevent a marriage contract which a woman pronounce herself based on the principle of equality or equivalence and one which involves the giving of the mahru al-mithl”. Had the prohibition been imposed on wali, it would have meant that a wali will have the right to cancel the marriage only through a judge; if the woman did not marry a man equal to her or the man did not give her mahr al-mithl.

The difference of interpretation among the mutaffir occurs due to different things with which the word nikah is associated. Al-Jashas associated the word nikah with women with a consideration of the two strings of words mentioned above and, And thus, that is the reason why the interpretation takes on a broader meaning. On the other hand, the other mutaffir who made the associated edition of the word nikah with wali, and, therefore, maintain that it is the wali who has the right to solemnize the marriage. This latter form of understanding is more closely related to that of the majority of Fiqh scholars, while On the contrary, the former opinion tends to be popular among Hanafi scholars.

Concerning verse 234 of Surah Al-Baqarah, the most important part that mutaffir refer to in understanding this verse is the sentence “There is no blame upon you for what they do with themselves in an acceptable manner”. Al-Thabary (p. 516), Ibn al-'Araby (p. 212) and al-Qurthuby (p. 187) agreed to determine that the prohibition contained in “there is no blame upon you (walis)” are specifically directed towards walis. Similarly, the sentence “for what they do with themselves” means marriage and the words “in an acceptable manner” means every lawful matters that are lawful in Islam in relation to marriage, such as the choosing of a future husband, determination of dowry, etc., except for running the marriage contract since that is the right of a wali. As a matter of fact, the explanation offered by the three mufassir indicates that it is unacceptable and contradictory to the verse to let women take care of their own marriage.

On the contrary, al-Jashsas (p. 197) stated that the generality of the verse covers the marriage contract performed by women. The words “there is no blame upon you for what they do with themselves in an acceptable manner” can still be interpreted as there is no right for wali to interfere with matters related to the woman until she completes her iddah is finished (including the pronouncement of marriage contract) as long as they are permissible in not disapproved of by the Islamic law. The fact that male wali (guardian) is required in the marriage contract contradicts the intention of this verse. The opinion which holds that in a marriage contract a woman’s only rights are to choose the husband and determine the amount of dowry but not to handle take care of her own marriage is rejected since wali -cannot solemnize the marriage without the consent of the woman. The choosing of a husband and determination of a dowry will mean nothing if the marriage fail to take place.

Forms of Mufassir Subjectivity towards Schools of Fiqh in the Interpretation of Marriage Verses

There are four forms of possible subjectivity that mufassir have towards Fiqh schools in interpreting marriage verses.

The first indication lies in the difference of mufassir opinions in interpreting the background of revelation of verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah in relation to Ma’qil Ibn Yasar. Mufassir from the majority of Fiqh scholars interpreted that the verse was revealed in regard to wali. Therefore, matters concerning with regard to marriage should be handed over entirely in its entirety to wali. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi school interpreted the background of revelation to concern the wali but they also believed the verse has a general application. Therefore, the marriage guardianship can also be handled by others.

Another indication is in their disagreement with the definition of the word nikah, which is a crucial concept to clarify in interpreting a number of verses on marriage. The mufassir from the majority of Fiqh scholars always associated the word nikah with wali, and therefore believed that matters about with regard to marriage should be taken care of by wali, not others. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi school did not associate the word exclusively with wali and therefore maintain that matters concerning in regard to marriage can be handled by any parties, including women.

The next indication is in how they differ in the positioning of the function and degree of the hadith in relation to Quran. Mufassir from the majority of scholars believed that the command and prohibition contained in several marriage verses were directed towards wali, thus, they also believed that several hadiths on nikah (aforementioned) serve to explain the generality of the verse in more details, except for the hadith on Aisha who acted as a wali in a marriage, which they considered against the law. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi school who considered that the command and prohibition in the marriage verses have a general application, including to women, thus they maintained that those hadith do not serve to explain the verses in detail. That is because they argued think that those hadiths have flaws in terms of sanad (chain of narration) and the content itself.

The last indication is concerned with the difference in how they attribute the importance of relationship between verses and hadiths in helping them make their interpretation. Mufassir from the majority of scholars did not put attach great importance toward the relationship. Therefore, their interpretation is more partial and disconnected to each other, and the ones whose accuracy is also difficult to justify. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi school considered the relationship important. As a result, their interpretations are more coherent, cohesive and it is relatively easier to justify the accuracy of their interpretation in comparison to the former. These differences in interpretation may be influenced by the schools of fiqh to which they subscribed.

CONCLUSION

Referring to the arguments of the fuqaha, mufassir and the hadith explainers in comprehending, explaining the meaning and interpreting several verses of the Qur'an and the Hadith about marriage, it can be they concur with the conclusion that the commands and the prohibitions contained in the verses of the Quran are still general.

The dissents are around the meaning of the word nikah, which is the principal concept to understand and interpret the verses. The mufassir from the majority of fiqaha always associated the word nikah to the wali, so the matter concerning related to marriage should be handled taken care of by wali, not others. Hence, it makes some hadith about marriage are served to explain the generality of the selected verses. On the other hand, the mufassir from Hanafi school and did not associate the word nikah solely to the wali but to any parties. Therefore, the foregoing may be handed to all parties, including women, and accordingly, those hadith do not serve to explain the verses in detail.

There are four forms of mufassir's subjective indications to the fiqh school they subscribed:

First, when the mufassir differed in interpreting the Asbab al-Nuzul of surah al-Baqarah verse 232 concerning that related to Ma'qil Ibn Yasar. The mufassir of jumhur fiqaha who maintained that the occasion the verse revelation is specifically addressed to the wali (not someone else), then the marriage guardianship must be handed entirely to the wali. Meanwhile, another one, the mufassir of Hanafi school who maintained that the cause of the verse revelation is specifically addressed to the wali, but they assume that the law is generally accepted, thus, the marriage guardianship may also be handled by women.

The second indication is in their disagreement concerning the word nikah, which is the key concept to clarify the marriage verses. The mufassir of jumhur fuqaha' who associates the word nikah to the wali, then it is the wali who has the right to solemnize the marriage, not others. Otherwise, the mufassir of Hanafi school who does not associate the word nikah to the wali, then the marriage matters might be handled by any parties including women.

The third indication lies in difference of mufassir's opinion in positioning the function and the degree of the hadith toward the Qur'an itself. The mufassir of jumhur fuqaha' who considered the generality of the commands or prohibitions contained in the marriage verses are addressed to the wali, thus some of the marriage hadith (aforementioned) are served to explain the generality of the verses in detail. On the other hand, the mufassir of Hanafi school who maintained that the generality of the commands or prohibitions contained in the verses are applied to all, including women, then these hadith are not served to explain the generality of the verses. That is because they think that those hadiths have flaws in terms of sanad (chain of narration) and the content itself.

The last indication is concerned with their dissent in how they attribute to the importance of munasabat (correlation) between verses and hadiths in helping them in their interpretation. The mufassirs of jumhur fuqaha' who considered the correlation is less important, hence their interpretation is more partial, disconnected to each other and its one whose accuracy is rather difficult to justify. Conversely, the mufassir of Hanafi school who believed that the correlation is important, as a result, their interpretations are more coherent, cohesive and it is relatively easier to justify the accuracy of their interpretation compared to in comparison to the former.

Finally, it is hope that the schools, mufassir and muhaddith in studying and analysing the problems occurred and developed among various schools, mufassir and muhaddith, should not be supposed not to be subjective in defending the truth of one opinion, or even to blame other opinions that are not in line with the opinions held. That is because as eventually, an objective truth is difficult to achieve in such practices this way.

THE SUBJECTIVITY INDICATION OF SCHOOL OF FIQH IN THE INTERPRETATION OF MARRIAGE VERSES

Nasaiy Aziz, Faculty of Sharia and Law, State Islamic University (UIN) Ar-Raniry, Indonesia. Email: nasaiy.aziz@ar-raniry.ac.id

This paper has original contribution of knowledge as not issued earlier. The topic is on injustice interpretation of marriage verses stated by Islamic clerics. A number of the Quran verses and the hadith of the Prophet PBUH related to marriage has a general meaning and apply to all parties. The Fuqaha’ (Islamic law scholars/Jurist) of four schools and mufassir (Quran interpreter) of the same school (mazhab), agree to determine the generality of the meaning of several marriage verses to be applied for all without limiting the certain parties. The difference in their opinions is related to the meaning of the word nikah, which is the main subject to understand and interpret the verses. The jumhur (majority) of fuqaha’ and mufassir of the same school always associate the word marriage to the wali (Guardian) so that he must handle the matter concerning the marriage. On the other hand, mufassir from Hanafi school argue that the word nikah applies to a broader meaning and is not exclusively addressed to wali, so the marriage guardianship can be handed to any parties, including women.

Introduction
The Quran as the first and foremost source of law in Islam is continuously interpreted and deciphered by the fuqaha’ and mufassir since the earliest generations of Islam to date (Abubakar, 2019; Fuqohak, 2020). The interpretation and the deciphering of the message of the Quran aim not only to understand the contents of the Quran itself but also to implement its message in everyday life (Mawardi, 2020; Thalib, Sabrie, 2020). The diversity of backgrounds and considerations will influence the mufassir in interpreting the marriage verses, for example, the differences in their competency in understanding and mastering the language of the Quran and the variations in interpreting the Asbab al-Nuzul (Mufid, 2020; Wathani, 2020). On the other hand, there is also the influence of their dependency on the school of fiqih (which they subscribed) in their interpretation. Above all, the last-mentioned factor even contributes most to the diversity of their interpretation subjectivity, and at the same time becomes an important highlight in this paper, which will be explained specifically in the next section. The verses which are concerned to are verse 221, 230 232 and 234 of Surah al-Baqarah.
The Comprehension of Fiqh Schools Towards Marriage Verses

The Fiqh schools here are the Hanafi, Maliki, Shafi'i and Hanbali Schools, of which the last three mentioned - henceforth – termed as jumhur fuqaha' (the majority of fuqaha'). The fuqaha' selected are, Ibn Hazm, Ibn al Humam, Ibn Rusyd, Kasani and Sayid Sabiq. The following will explain of how the four school fuqaha' comprehend these verses.

Verse 221 of the Surah Al-Baqarah: Translation: And do not marry polytheistic women until they believe. And a believing slave woman is better than a polytheist, even though she might please you. And do not marry polytheistic men [to your women] until they believe. And a believing slave is better than a polytheist, even though he might please you. Those invite [you] to the Fire, but Allah invites to Paradise and to forgiveness, by His permission. And He makes clear His verses to the people that perhaps they may remember.

According to Sayid Sabiq, (n.d.) and Ibn Rushd (1992) (when explaining the opinion of jumhur fuqaha'), the prohibition in this verse means specifically addressed to the wali, as though Allah said "O guardian, don't you marry women who is under your guardianship with men who are still idolaters". However, Ibn Rushd (1992), when explaining the opinion of Abu Hanifah, argued otherwise. He argued that the prohibition is more likely to be understood as waliyul amri rather than wali. Moreover, there is no further explanation regarding the types of guardians, their nature and degree of marriage guardianship if the prohibition is believed.

Verse 230 of the Surah Al-Baqarah: Translation: And if he has divorced her [for the third time], then she is not lawful to him afterwards until [after] she marries a husband other than him. And if the latter husband divorces her [or dies], there is no blame upon the woman and her former husband for returning to each other if they think that they can keep [within] the limits of Allah. These are the limits of Allah, which He makes clear to a people who know.

When explaining the jumhur fuqaha' opinions, Ibn Hazm, (n.d.) said that this verse means a marriage without wali is invalid. However, Sayed Sabiq (1971) and Ibn al Humam (n.d.), when explaining the opinion of Abu Hanifah, argued otherwise. They believed this verse is about marriage, which is closely related to women. They argued that linking a matter to the subject shows that the person is the main subject and is also more entitled to handle the matter compared to others.

Verse 232 of the Surah Al-Baqarah: Translation: And when you divorce women and they have fulfilled their term, do not prevent them from remarrying their [former] husbands if they agree among themselves on an acceptable basis. That is instructed to whoever of you believes in Allah and the Last Day. That is better for you and purer, and Allah knows and you know not.
Sayed Sabiq (1971), explaining the opinions of jumhur fuqaha’, commented that the prohibition on the word prevent here specifically intended for the wali. This is in line with the occasion of revelation (asbab an-nuzul), which will be explained further later. However, Al Kasani (1910), when explaining the opinion of Abu Hanifa, had the the opposite views. According to him, the prohibition here is more general because several possible objectives can be understood from this verse. First, as the concept of jumhur fuqaha’ above (provided that this possibility is somewhat more difficult compared to the next two possibilities), the prohibition was addressed to the wali but in a different meaning from what the jumhur fuqaha’ maintained above. The point here is about a wali who prevents the women under his guardianship to run their own marriage with the men of her choice. Second, the prohibition in the verse is addressed to the husband, in the sense that the husband is prohibited from hindering his divorced wife while she has finished her ’iddah (waiting period) to marry the man of her choice. This consideration is based on the phrase "If you divorce your wife" at the beginning of the verse.

Verse 234 of the Surah Al-Baqarah: Translation: And those who are taken in death among you and leave wives behind - they, [the wives, shall] wait four months and ten [days]. And when they have fulfilled their term, then there is no blame upon you for what they do with themselves in an acceptable manner. And Allah is [fully] acquainted with what you do.

Ibn Hazm (n.d.), when explaining the opinion of jumhur fuqaha’, said that the prohibition in this verse is addressed to the wali. It is as if Allah said, “Guardians, do not obstruct a woman whom her husband has died and has finished his ’iddah (a waiting period) from marrying another man in a way that is Makruf (familiar).” This comprehension is different from the Hanafi school, which maintains that an akad nikah (hereafter marriage contract) carried out by the woman herself and the man of her choice and blessed with mithil dowry is included in the makruf concept in this verse. Therefore, the marriage should be considered valid, because it includes the act of makruf, which is in accordance with the will of the wali (Kasani, 1910).

The above explanation shows that, following jumhur fuqaha’, the marriage matter will be considered makruf if it handed entirely to the wali. However, the Hanafi school believes vice versa, that this matter will not be considered makruf if it is not handed to the women.

The Function and the Degree of Hadith Toward the Generality of Marriage Verses

This discussion is necessary to clarify the function and the degree of the hadith toward several marriage verses. The selected hadiths are the ones narrated from Abu Musa, Aisha ra, and from Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiq. The chosen hadiths narrators are Ahmad al-Sahar Nafuri, Al-Nawawi, Baihaqi, Ibn al Humam, Ibn Qayyim al-Jauziyyat, Mubarakfuri, Muhammad Zakariya and Zarqani. Among the hadith is the hadith of Abu Musa, the Matan (text of hadith) is according to al-Turmuzi (Mubarakfuri, n.d.). Translation: from Abu Musa he said: The Messenger of Allah said: "There is no legal marriage without a wali". This hadith was narrated from Ahmad, Abu Daud, al Turmuzi, Ibn Majah and Hakim. The Sanad (or Isnad) of the hadith (the hadith’s chain of transmitters) can be seen in Figure 1.

Al-Turmuzi considered this hadith is hasan sahih, although other scholars of hadith have different opinions about its validity due to several indicators. First, al-Turmuzi considers all reports based on Abu Ishaq is shahih (valid), except for the history of Syu'bah and al-Sauri. According to him, the objection to the two men is because both of them coincided with time and place when they heard the hadith from Abu Ishaq; therefore, the validity of the hadith is doubtful. Secondly, al-Turmuzi also acknowledged the weakness of the narration of the hadith which did not rely on Abu Ishaq but directly to Abu Burdah, which means that his sanad was interrupted. Third, there is an error of sanad in the narration of Abu Dawud: Yunus, Ismail and Abu Burdah are from one narration, then Yunus and Ismail jointly narrating the hadith from Abu Ishaq, as if, there are two Burdah in the sanad. Yet, as it is seen in the Sanad al-Turmuzi, there is only one Abu Burdah (Nafuri, n.d.; Ibn Qayyim, n.d.; Mubarakfuri, n.d.).

Next is the hadith from Aisha, which the matan (content/text of hadith) is from Abu Dawood: (Nafuri, n.d.) Translation: Aishah ra,. narrated that the Messenger of Allah said: "Whichever woman married without the permission of her wali her marriage is invalid, her marriage is invalid, her marriage is invalid. If he entered into her, then the Mahir is for her in lieu of what he enjoyed from her private part. If they disagree, then the Sultan is the wali for one who has no wali". This hadith was narrated by Ahmad, Abu Dawood and Ibn Majah.

The sanad of the hadith can be seen in Figure 2. Al-Turmuzi considered this hadith to be hasan (good), even Ibn Hibban and the Hakim judged it as Shahih (valid), even though the scholars of other hadith still doubted its validity. That doubt was found in the narration of Zuhri and the statement was very popular among the scholars of hadith. On one hand, Ibn Juraij, in one narration, had met Zuhri and questioned about the hadith, then he answered, "I do not know". Such answer according to the hadith scholar can weaken the validity of the narration (Baihaqi, n.d.; Qayyim, n.d.; Mubarakfuri, n.d.). However, al-Turmuzi, Ibn Hibban and Hakim - to refute these doubts - still considered that the event did not affect the validity of the hadith because none of other hadith scholars narrated the story of Ibn Juraij, except Ibn Ulayyah himself. Whereas, this hadith is narrated by a group of hadith experts from Zuhri, but they did not mention that the explanation is from him. Even though the statement is true, it cannot be used as the reason to weaken this hadith, because the person narrated it from Zuhri was an honest individual, including Sulaiman Ibn Musa (Baihaqi, n.d.; Qayyim, n.d.; Mubarakfuri, n.d.). This statement is ungrounded, because basically they acknowledged the incident, therefore, the validity of the hadith is in doubt.
On the other hand, the scholar of hadith also found the issue about the validity of the hadith. Ibn Qayyim (n.d.), a Sunan Abi Dawud explainer - through his narration from al-Qa'nbaby - said that Jakfar (Ibn Rabi'ah) had never heard this hadith from Zuhri. This statement is also supported by the statement of al-Baihaqy (n.d.) from Ibn Mu'in, that the narration from Ibn Rabi'ah is considered weak due to his personal character. Moreover, he added that Zuhri was considered to deny his narration by saying "If a woman marries without her wali's consent, it is permissible". This opinion is held by Al-Sya'by, Abu Hanifah and Zu'far. Ahmad al-Sahar Nafuri (n.d.), a Sunan Abi Dawood explainer, – in relation to this matter – also clarified that: the flaw of the hadith is not only due to the narration doubt about Zuhri as mentioned above, but also because this narration is contrary to his own practice, namely the hadith about the marriage of his brother's son (Hafsah bint Abd Rahman with Munzir Ibn Zuber), which will be explained afterward.

Both of the hadith above are considered weak, either in its sanad or matan. The weaknesses in terms of sanad sometimes is due to the disconnection of sanad between one narrator with the other narrators, as found in the Burdah of the hadith from Abu Musa, or between one narrator and the other narrators do not know about its narration as in the hadith from Aisha. While the weakness in terms of matan is sometimes caused by the conflicts between one hadith and another, such as the practice of Aisha ra. From the hadith of Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiqi (which will be explained later), which is contrary to his own hadith and as in the hadith of Abu Musa about requiring guardians in marriage.

Build upon the evaluations above, both of these hadith are appeared to be weak. Therefore, the Hasan Shahih level given by al-Turmuzi, and Shahih level given by Ibn Hibban and Hakim is considered too high for these hadith. It is supposed to be downgraded to a lower level and need a further research on it (Ja’far, 2020).

The last one is the hadith from Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiq, with the matan is based on Imam Malik (Zakariya, n.d.) Translation: From Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiq that Aisha, the wife of the Prophet Muhammad, married the Hafsah bint Abdul Rahman with Munzir Ibn Zuber on the matter that he (Abd Rahman) was in the land of Sham. When he came, he was upset about Aisha's actions, then Aisha told the problem to Munzir Ibn Zuber. let the problem be solved by Abd Rahman, Munzir answered. After that Abd Rahman said: I have never rejected Ayesha's wisdom. Based on that, Hafsah (took a stand for) remained with Munzir, and there was no divorce. This hadith was narrated by Malik from Abd Rahman ibn Qasim.

No detailed explanation was found regarding the sanad of this hadith. However, the dissent of the hadith scholars is arousing around the understanding of matan hadith itself. According to al-Bakhy, as explained by Muhammad Zakariya (n.d.), there are two possible meaning of this hadith. First, Aisha herself pronounced the marriage contract, but, this narration was refuted by Ibn Muzayyan, as it contradicted the practice of the Madinah clerics (amal al-Madinah), because Imam Malik himself and a number of other fuqaha’ did not allow women to become a marriage guardians. Second, Aisha's attitude towards the marriage was only to stipulate the dowry and other needs, not as a guardian. It is possible that the guardian of the marriage was one of the close relatives of Hafsah. However, there is no further explanation about the guardian in this marriage. This information shows that because the two narrations were not mentioned concretely, it is scientifically difficult to maintain the truth of the narration.

Furthermore, al-Baakhy, as explained by Muhammad Zakariya (n.d.), argued that according to the Maliki school, the marriage between Hafsah Abd Rahman and Munzir Ibn Zuber (whom her father, Abd Rahman, was far away in Sham at that time) is not allowed at all. Besides, Hafsah was still a virgin and her father was alive at the time of the marriage held.

Al-Zarqani (n.d.), who is also an explainer of the Muwatta book, denied al-Baakhy's information, arguing that Aisha's actions was considered legitimate and there was no one to represent her, and her privilege as the wife of Rasulullah PBUH. Although the wali is far away, the guardianship in marriage is necessary, even if the wali is not the wife of Rasulullah PBUH. If the marriage carried out by Aisha was true and an example of a marriage that was guarded by a woman because it was Aisha's privilege as the wife of the Prophet; the questions are why some scholars never considered her as guardian in marriage and how to deal with hadiths related to the marriage guardianship which also originated from Aisha herself? Textually, it can be said that there are two contradicting cases committed by the same person; on one hand, Aisha is presupposed only the men as wali in marriage yet on the other hand, she herself through her practice (marrying Hafsah with Munzir) acknowledged the acquisition of women as a wali in the marriage (Nafuri, n.d.; Baihaqi, n.d.; Zakariya, n.d.).

Based on the previous analyses, it can be concluded that their dissent in comprehending the matan of the hadith is because the lafaz (the pronunciation) of the hadith is too general. The jumhur fuqaha' preferences of the first opinion - the best guess- because the hadiths related to marriage (that is mentioned above) are considered as pentakhsis (as specialization) for the generality of the former hadith.

Conversely, the Hanafi School preferred the second opinion because the hadiths were not served to explain the generality of this hadith because the validity of the sanad is in doubt. They argued what was done by Aisha (which was approved by all scholars, including jumhur fuqaha') was one of the causes of the weakness of the hadith (about a wali must be a man in marriage guardianship) - to be used as a source of law. Hanafi even assumed that Aisha's hadith about the marriage of Hafsah and Munzir was a nasikh (abrogation) of Aisha's aforementioned hadith or at least could be considered as inkar rawi (the denial on the hadith narrator) in the Mushthalah hadith (science about hadith) (Humam, n.d.; Mubarakfuri, n.d.). In addition, the scholars are still debating the validity of the sanad of hadith. Also, to comply to the general dalil (propositions) in determining the law is better than specific arguments that are weak.

Referring back to the hadiths which jumhur fuqaha' assume to be the dalil for the existence of a wali in a marriage, the Hanafi school considered the opposite. The Hanafi school believed that the validity of these hadiths are questionable, both in terms of matan and sanad. The flaw in terms of matan is sometimes caused by inkar rawi between one hadith and another, such as the practice of Aisha (Prophet's wife).

Likewise, for the hadith from Abu Musa and Aisha, the weaknesses of these two hadiths are not only because they contradict the Aisha's practice –in the event of marriage of Hafsah bnt Abd Rahman and Munzir Ibn Zubair, and at that time Abd Rahman was in Bilaad as Sham - but also because the validity of the sanad of both hadiths are still debatable.

Regarding the hadith of marriage guardianship, the jumhur fuqaha comprehensions tend to interpret the hadith textually rather than contextually. This is because they concerned more on interpreting the proposition (dalil) of the text and disregard other probabilities. For example, when comprehending the verses, they are more influenced by the meaning of the text of hadiths of marriage guardianship, even implicitly it can be said that there is an assumption from jumhur fuqaha' that these hadith are served to specifically explain the general marriage verses.

On the other hand, the way of understanding adopted by the Hanafi school in studying texts, both the Quran and the hadith, is quite different from the pattern adopted by jumhur fuqaha. The subject of the study is more directed toward the understanding of the texts as a whole, with the condition that not only to pay attention to the various possibilities that occur between one text to another, but also to put the concern on the intent or illat included. For example, the meaning and illat are adjusted to the circumstance and situation of the community. Such thinking is more directed towards comprehension which considers the reason or illat of the law itself, in addition to manifesting benefit rather than just explaining the meaning in the text alone (Umar, 2020).

Interpretation of Verses Understood by Scholars of The Four Schools of Fiqh

The mufassirs selected in this case were Al-Qurthubi, Al-Thabari, Ibn al-‘Arabi Abu Bakar Al-Jashsas and Rasyid Ridha, assuming that their interpretation can represent the four schools of fiqh. Mufassir focused on two main subjects to understand the message behind those Quranic verses: the background of revelation and the literal meaning in those verses. First, the particular verse investigated in relation to its background of revelation is the verse that is more related to the issue of marriage guardianship. In addition, the scope of meaning and message in those verses are discussed.

According to several exegesis (tafseer) books, of the four aforementioned verses, the background of the revelation of verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah is the most related to this issue. Imam Al-Thabari (1954) outlined several narrations concerning its background of revelation and one that is deemed credible is the one involving Ma’qil Ibnu Yasar, who prevented his divorced sister to return (ruj’u) to her husband.

This is in line with the hadith narrated by Abu Dawud as follows: Translation: From Al-Hasan, that Ma’qil said, I have a sister which is dear to me, and when the son of my uncle came, then I gave her away to him and he divorced her once and did not take her back until her waiting period (iddah) finished. Then when I was going to give her away, her former husband came back and want to remarry her, to whom I said: “By Allah, she will never return to you” and thus that verse was revealed...He said I pay expiation for oath and I gave her away back to him for marriage. This hadith was narrated by Bukhari and Abu Dawood.

Mufassir agreed to determine that that hadith was the reason why verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah was revealed. However, they differ in the interpretation of the background of revelation and the interpretation of the verse itself. Al-Qurthubi (1967) maintained that the verse was revealed in connection to wali based on the interpretation of another verse that wali is prohibited to hand his daughters under his guardianship to a polytheist man. This argument is supported by Ahmad al-Sahar Nafuri (n.d.) who stated that this hadith counts as hadith that prescribes the existence of a wali in a marriage. Abubakar Al-Jashsas (n.d.) disagreed that the verse was revealed exclusively in relation to wali. He believed it is difficult to justify such an opinion since the prohibition has a general context which involves all parties, including the husband. This opinion is shared by Rasyid Ridha (n.d.) who believed that although the verse was revealed for a specific reason, it has a general application nonetheless, including the former husband who prevents his divorced wife to marry another man of her choice. The difference in interpretation will be outlined in the interpretation of verse 232.

According to Ibn al-'Arabi (1950), the word nikah in verse 230 has two meanings, namely marriage contract (explicitly) and sexual intercourse (implicitly) (Khanif, 2019; Armia, 2017). Suppose that one adopts the first meaning, then it means a woman is allowed to give herself and others away in marriage because the word nikah is directly tied to her. On the contrary, if the latter meaning was adopted, it means women will never be allowed to give herself and others away in marriage. This is because the verse does not literally state so. In this case, he adopted the implicit meaning (general interpretation is based on the explicit meaning), arguing that the hadiths concerning marriage tend to support such opinions. In contrast, Al-Jashsas (n.d.) believed that the verse should be interpreted based on its explicit meaning (instead of the implicit meaning). In fact, it is the meaning of such nature that is intended by the verse. In support of his claim, he pointed out two strings of words in the verse, first; “until after she marries a husband other than him”, which means the woman herself in the pronouncement of the marriage contract and, second; “there is no blame upon the woman and her husband for returning to each other” which is interpreted that a divorced couple have the right to return to their former marriage without involving a wali. In fact, the word wali, as intended here, not only includes men but also women. The differences of the interpretation of the implicit and explicit meaning are influenced by the schools of fiqh they subscribed.

Concerning the interpretation of verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah, mufassir agreed to interpret the word “prevent” in “do not prevent them from remarrying their (former husbands or other men)” to mean “to hinder, prevent and make it difficult”. However, their opinions differ when determining the prohibition in that verse. Ibn al-'Arabi (1950) argued that the verse is related to wali who are prohibited against preventing women under their guardianship to marry men of their choice. Preventing from marriage here means that the wali is not willing to solemnize the marriage. If women had rights to give themselves away, there would not be any prohibition against the prevention in that verse. However, Al-Jashsas (n.d.) maintained a conflicting opinion stating that the verse serves as the main argument allowing women to handle and run their own marriage, in addition to other supporting verses. In fact, he rejected the opinion saying that women have no right whatsoever in pronouncing the marriage contract.
There are two strings of words in the verse used to support this opinion. The first one is “do not prevent them from remarrying their (former husbands or other men)” of which he interpreted to mean that women must not be prevented to pronounce their own marriage contract with men of their choice. The second one is the word “al ma’ruf “, which is defined as equality of equivalence, and mahru al-mithl. From the concepts of those two groups, he concluded that “no one has the right to prevent a marriage contract which a woman pronounce herself based on the principle of equality or equivalence and one which involves the giving of the mahru al-mithl”. Had the prohibition been imposed on wali, it would have meant that a wali will have the right to cancel the marriage only through a judge; if the woman did not marry a man equal to her or the man did not give her mahr al-mithl.

The difference of interpretation among the mufassir occurs they associated the word nikah with different things. Al-Jashas associated the word nikah with women with a consideration of the two strings of words mentioned above and, thus, the interpretation takes on a broader meaning. On the other hand, the other mufassir associated the word nikah with wali, and, therefore, wali has the right to solemnize the marriage. This latter understanding is more closely related to that of the majority of fiqh scholars, while the former opinion tends to be popular among Hanafi scholars.

Concerning verse 234 of Surah Al-Baqarah, the most important part that mufassir refer to in understanding this verse is the sentence “There is no blame upon you for what they do with themselves in an acceptable manner”. Al-Thabari (1954), Ibn al-‘Arabi (1950) and al-Qurthuby (1967) agreed to determine that the prohibition in “there is no blame upon you (wali)” are specifically directed towards wali. Similarly, the sentence “for what they do with themselves” means marriage and the words “in an acceptable manner” means every lawful matters in Islam in relation to marriage, such as the choosing of a future husband, determination of dowry, etc., except for running the marriage contract since that is the right of a wali. As a matter of fact, the explanation offered by the three mufassir indicates that it is unacceptable and contradictory to the verse to let women take care of their own marriage.

On the contrary, al-Jashas (n.d.) stated that the generality of the verse covers the marriage contract performed by women. The words “there is no blame upon you for what they do with themselves in an acceptable manner” can still be interpreted as there is no right for wali to interfere with matters related to the woman until she completes her iddah (including the pronunciation of marriage contract) as long as they are permissible in the Islamic law. The fact that male wali (guardian) is required in the marriage contract contradicts the intention of this verse. The opinion which holds that in a marriage contract a woman’s only rights are to choose the husband and determine the amount of dowry but not to handle her own marriage is rejected since wali cannot solemnize the marriage without the consent of the woman. The choosing of a husband and determination of a dowry will mean nothing if the marriage fail to take place.

Forms of Mufassir Subjectivity towards Schools of Fiqh in the Interpretation of Marriage Verses

There are four forms of possible subjectivity that mufassir have towards fiqh schools in interpreting marriage verses. The first indication lies in the difference of mufassir opinions in interpreting the background of revelation of verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah in relation to Ma’qil Ibn Yasar. Mufassir from the majority of fiqaha interpreted that the verse was revealed in regard to wali. Therefore, matters concerning marriage should be handed over entirely to wali. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi school interpreted the background of revelation to concern the wali but they also believed the verse has a general application. Therefore, the marriage guardianship can also be handled by women.

Another indication is in their disagreement with the definition of the word nikah, which is a crucial concept to clarify in interpreting a number of verses on marriage. The mufassir from the majority of fiqh scholars always associated the word nikah with wali, and therefore believed that matters about marriage should be taken care of by wali (Soraya, 2016), not others. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi school did not associate the word exclusively with wali and therefore maintain that matters concerning marriage can be handled by any parties, including women.

The next indication is in how they differ in the positioning of the function and degree of the hadith in relation to Quran. Mufassir from the majority of scholars believed that the command and prohibition in several marriage verses were directed towards wali, thus, they also believed that several hadiths on nikah (aforementioned) serve to explain the generality of the verse in more details, except for the hadith on Aisha who acted as a wali in a marriage, which they considered against the law. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi school considered that the command and prohibition in the marriage verses have a general application, including to women, thus they maintained that those hadith do not serve to explain the verses in detail. That is because they argued that those hadiths have flaws in terms of sanad (chain of narration) and the content itself.

The last indication is concerned with the difference in how they attributes the importance of relationship between verses and hadiths in helping them make their interpretation. Mufassir from the majority of scholars did not put great importance toward the relationship. Therefore, their interpretation is more partial and disconnected to each other, and the accuracy is also difficult to justify. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi school considered the relationship important. As a result, their interpretations are more coherent, cohesive and it is relatively easier to justify the accuracy of their interpretation in comparison to the former (Khudhur, 2020). These differences in interpretation may be influenced by the schools of fiqh they subscribed.
Conclusion
There are four forms of mufassir's subjective indications to the fiqh school they subscribed: First, when the mufassir differed in interpreting the Asbab al-Nuzul of surah al-Baqarah verse 232 concerning Ma'qil Ibnu Yasar. The mufassir of jumhur fuqaha’ maintained that the occasion the verse revelation is specifically addressed to the wali (not someone else), then the marriage guardianship must be handed entirely to the wali. Meanwhile, the mufassir of Hanafi school maintained that the cause of the verse revelation is specifically addressed to the wali, but they assume that the law is generally accepted, thus, the marriage guardianship may also be handled by women.

The second indication is in their disagreement concerning the word nikah, the key concept to clarify the marriage verses. The mufassir of jumhur fuqaha’ associated the word nikah to the wali, then it is the wali who has the right to solemnize the marriage, not others. Otherwise, the mufassir of Hanafi school did not associate the word nikah to the wali, then the marriage matters might be handled by any parties including women.

The third indication lies in difference of mufassir’s opinion in positioning the function and the degree of the hadith toward the Quran itself. The mufassir of jumhur fuqaha’ considered that the generality of the commands or prohibitions in the marriage verses are addressed to the wali, thus some of the marriage hadith (aforementioned) are served to explain the generality of the verses in detail. On the other hand, the mufassir of Hanafi school maintained that the generality of the commands or prohibitions in the verses apply to all, including women, then these hadith are not served to explain the generality of the verses. That is because they think that those hadiths have flaws in terms of sanad (chain of narration) and the content itself.

The last indication is concerned with their dissent in how they attribute to the importance of munasabat (correlation) between verses and hadiths in helping them in their interpretation. The mufassirs of jumhur fuqaha’ considered the correlation is less important, hence their interpretation is more partial, disconnected to each other and its accuracy is rather difficult to justify. Conversely, the mufassir of Hanafi school believed that the correlation is important, as a result, their interpretations are more coherent, cohesive and it is relatively easier to justify the accuracy of their interpretation compared to the former.

Finally, it is hope that the schools, mufassir and muhaddith in studying and analysing the problems occurred and developed should not be subjective in defending the truth of one opinion, or even to blame other opinions that are not in line with the opinions held. That is because an objective truth is difficult to achieve in such practices.

The Subjectivity Indication of School of Fiqh in the Interpretation of Marriage Verses

This paper has original contribution of knowledge as not issued earlier. The topic is on injustice interpretation of marriage verses stated by Islamic clerics. A number of the Quran verses and the hadith of the Prophet PBUH related to marriage have a general meaning and apply to all parties. The Fuqaha’ (Islamic law scholars/Jurist) of four schools and mufassir (Quran interpreter) of the same school (mazhab), agree to determine the generality of the meaning of several marriage verses to be applied for all without limiting the certain parties. The difference in their opinions is related to the meaning of the word nikah, which is the main subject to understand and interpret the verses. The jumhur (majority) of fuqaha’ and mufassir of the same school always associate the word marriage to the wali (Guardian) so that he must handle the matter concerning the marriage. On the other hand, mufassir from Hanafi School argue that the word nikah applies to a broader meaning and is not exclusively addressed to wali, so the marriage guardianship can be handed to any parties, including women.

Introduction

The Quran as the first and foremost source of law in Islam is continuously interpreted and deciphered by the fuqaha’ and mufassir since the earliest generations of Islam to date (Abubakar, 2019; Fuqohak, 2020). The interpretation and the deciphering of the message of the Quran aim not only to understand the contents of the Quran itself but also to implement its message in everyday life (Mawardi, 2020; Thalib, Sabrie, 2020). The diversity of backgrounds and considerations will influence the mufassir in interpreting the marriage verses, for example, the differences in their competency in understanding and mastering the language of the Quran and the variations in interpreting the Asbab al-Nuzul (Mufid, 2020; Wathani, 2020). On the other hand, there is also the influence of their dependency on the school of fiqh (which they subscribed) in their interpretation. Above all, the last-mentioned factor even contributes most to the diversity of their interpretation subjectivity, and at the same time becomes an important highlight in this paper, which will be explained specifically in the next section. The verses which are concerned to are verse 221, 230 232 and 234 of Surah al-Baqarah.

The Comprehension of Fiqh Schools towards Marriage Verses

The Fiqh schools here are the Hanafi, Maliki, Shafi'i and Hanbali Schools, of which the last three mentioned, henceforth, termed as jumhur fuqaha' (the majority of fuqaha'). The fuqaha' selected are, Ibn Hazm, Ibn al Humam, Ibn Rusyd, Kasani and Sayid Sabiq. The following will explain how the four school fuqaha' comprehend these verses.

Verse 221 of the Surah Al-Baqarah: Translation: And do not marry polytheistic women until they believe. And a believing slave woman is better than a polytheist, even though she might please you. And do not marry polytheistic men [to your women] until they believe. And a believing slave is better than a polytheist, even though he might please you. Those invite [you] to the Fire, but Allah invites to Paradise and to forgiveness, by His permission. And He makes clear His verses to the people that perhaps they may remember.

According to Sayid Sabiq, (2010) and Ibn Rushd (1992) (when explaining the opinion of jumhur fuqaha'), the prohibition in this verse means specifically addressed to the wali, as though Allah said "O guardian, don't you marry women who is under your guardianship with men who are still idolaters". However, Ibn Rushd (1992), when explaining the opinion of Abu Hanifah, argued otherwise. He argued that the prohibition is more likely to be understood as waliyul amri rather than wali. Moreover, there is no further explanation regarding the types of guardians, their nature and degree of marriage guardianship if the prohibition is believed.

Verse 230 of the Surah Al-Baqarah: Translation: And if he has divorced her [for the third time], then she is not lawful to him afterwards until [after] she marries a husband other than him. And if the latter husband divorces her [or dies], there is no blame upon the woman and her former husband for returning to each other if they think that they can keep [within] the limits of Allah. These are the limits of Allah, which He makes clear to a people who know.

When explaining the jumhur fuqaha' opinions, Ibn Hazm, (2010) said that this verse means a marriage without wali is invalid. However, Sayed Sabiq (1971) and Ibn al Humam (2010), when explaining the opinion of Abu Hanifah, argued otherwise. They believed this verse is about marriage, which is closely related to women. They argued that linking a matter to the subject shows that the person is the main subject and is also more entitled to handle the matter compared to others.

Verse 232 of the Surah Al-Baqarah: Translation: And when you divorce women and they have fulfilled their term, do not prevent them from remarrying their [former] husbands if they agree among themselves on an acceptable basis. That is instructed to whoever of you believes in Allah and the Last Day. That is better for you and purer, and Allah knows and you know not.

Sayed Sabiq (1971), explaining the opinions of jumhur fuqaha', commented that the prohibition on the word prevent here specifically intended for the wali. This is in line with the occasion of revelation (asbab an-nuzul), which will be explained further later. However, Al Kasani (1910), when explaining the opinion of Abu Hanifa, had the opposite view. According to him, the prohibition here is more general because several possible objectives can be understood from this verse. First, as the concept of jumhur fuqaha' above (provided that this possibility is somewhat more difficult compared to the next two possibilities), the prohibition was addressed to the wali but in a different meaning from what the jumhur fuqaha' maintained above. The point here is about a wali who prevents the women under his guardianship to run their own marriage with the men of her choice. Second, the prohibition in the verse is addressed to the husband, in the sense that the husband is prohibited from hindering his divorced wife while she has finished her ‘iddah (waiting period) to marry the man of her choice. This consideration is based on the phrase "If you divorce your wife" at the beginning of the verse.

Verse 234 of the Surah Al-Baqarah: Translation: And those who are taken in death among you and leave wives behind - they, [the wives, shall] wait four months and ten [days]. And when they have fulfilled their term, then there is no blame upon you for what they do with themselves in an acceptable manner. And Allah is [fully] acquainted with what you do.

Ibn Hazm (2010), when explaining the opinion of jumhur fuqaha', said that the prohibition in this verse is addressed to the wali. It is as if Allah said, “Guardians, do not obstruct a woman whom her husband has died and has finished his iddah (a waiting period) from marrying another man in a way that is Makruf (familiar)”. This comprehension is different from the Hanafi School, which maintains that an akad nikah (hereafter marriage contract) carried out by the woman herself and the man of her choice and blessed with mithil dowry is included in the makruf concept in this verse. Therefore, the marriage should be considered valid, because it includes the act of makruf, which is in accordance with the will of the wali (Kasani, 1910).
The above explanation shows that, following jumhur fuqaha, the marriage matter will be considered makruf if it is handed entirely to the wali. However, the Hanafi school believes vice versa, that this matter will not be considered makruf if it is not handed to the women.

The Function and the Degree of Hadith toward the Generality of Marriage Verses

This discussion is necessary to clarify the function and the degree of the hadith toward several marriage verses. The selected hadiths are the ones narrated from Abu Musa, Aisha ra, and from Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiq. The chosen hadiths narrators are Ahmad al-Sahar Nafuri, Al-Nawawi, Baihaqi, Ibn al Humam, Ibn Qayyim al-Jauziyyat, Mubarakfuri, Muhammad Zakariya and Zarqani. Among the hadiths is the hadith of Abu Musa, the Matan (text of hadith) is according to al-Turmuzi (Mubarakfuri, 2010). Translation from Abu Musa, he said: The Messenger of Allah said: "There is no legal marriage without a wali". This hadith was narrated from Ahmad, Abu Daud, al Turmuzi, Ibn Majah and Hakim. The Sanad (or Isnad) of the hadith (the hadith’s chain of transmitters) can be seen in Figure 1.

Al-Turmuzi considered this hadith is hasan sahih, although other scholars of hadith have different opinions about its validity due to several indicators. First, al-Turmuzi considers all reports based on Abu Ishaq are shahih (valid), except for the history of Syu'bah and al-Sauri. According to him, the objection to the two men is because both of them coincided with time and place when they heard the hadith from Abu Ishaq; therefore, the validity of the hadith is doubtful. Secondly, al-Turmuzi also acknowledged the weakness of the narration of the hadith which did not rely on Abu Ishaq but directly to Abu Burdah, which means that his sanad was interrupted. Third, there is an error of sanad in the narration of Abu Dawud. Yunus, Ismail and Abu Burdah are from one narration, then Yunus and Ismail jointly narrating the hadith from Abu Ishaq, as if there are two Burdah in the sanad. Yet, as it is seen in the Sanad al-Turmuzi, there is only one Abu Burdah (Nafuri, 2010; Ibn Qayyim, 2010; Mubarakfuri, 2010).

Next is the hadith from Aisha, which the matan (content/text of hadith) is from Abu Dawood: (Nafuri, 2010) Translation: Aishah ra., narrated that the Messenger of Allah said: "Whichever woman married without the permission of her wali her marriage is invalid, her marriage is invalid. If he entered into her, then the Mahr is for her in lieu of what he enjoyed from her private part. If they disagree, then the Sultan is the wali for one who has no wali". This hadith was narrated by Ahmad, Abu Dawood and Ibn Majah.

The sanad of the hadith can be seen in Figure 2. Al-Turmuzi considered this hadith to be hasan (good), even Ibn Hibban and the Hakim judged it as Shahih (valid), even though the scholars of other hadith still doubted its validity. That doubt was found in the narration of Zuhri and the statement was very popular among the scholars of hadith. On one hand, Ibn Juraij, in one narration, had met Zuhri and questioned about the hadith, then he answered, "I do not know". Such an answer according to the hadith scholar can weaken the validity of the narration (Baihaqi, 2010; Qayyim, 2010; Mubarakfuri, 2010). However, al-Turmuzi, Ibn Hiban and Hakim, to refute these doubts, still considered that the event did not affect the validity of the hadith because none of other hadith scholars narrated the story of Ibn Juraij, except Ibn Ulayyah himself. Whereas, this hadith is narrated by a group of hadith experts from Zuhri, but they did not mention that the explanation is from him. Even though the statement is true, it cannot be used as the reason to weaken this hadith, because the person narrated it from Zuhri was an honest individual, including Sulaiman Ibn Musa (Baihaqi, 2010; Qayyim, 2010; Mubarakfuri, 2010). This statement is ungrounded, because basically they acknowledged the incident, therefore, the validity of the hadith is in doubt.
On the other hand, the scholar of hadith also found the issue about the validity of the hadith. Ibn Qayyim (2010), a Sunan Abi Dawud explainer, through his narration from al-Qa'naby, said that Jakfar (Ibn Rabi'ah) had never heard this hadith from Zuhri. This statement is also supported by the statement of al-Baihaqy (2010) from Ibn Mu'in, that the narration from Ibn Rabi'ah is considered weak due to his personal character. Moreover, he added that Zuhri was considered to deny his narration by saying "If a woman marries without her wali's consent, it is permissible". This opinion is held by Al-Sya'by, Abu Hanifah and Zufar. Ahmad al-Sahar Nafuri (2010), a Sunan Abi Dawood explainer, in relation to this matter, also clarified that: the flaw of the hadith is not only due to the narration doubt about Zuhri as mentioned above, but also because this narration is contrary to his own practice, namely the hadith about the marriage of his brother's son (Hafsah bnt Abd Rahman with Munzir Ibn Zuber), which will be explained later.

Both of the hadith above are considered weak, either in its sanad or matan. The weaknesses in terms of sanad sometimes is due to the disconnection of sanad between one narrator with the other narrators, as found in the Burdah of the hadith from Abu Musa, or between one narrator and the other narrators who do not know about its narration as in the hadith from Aisha. While the weakness in terms of matan is sometimes caused by the conflicts between one hadith and another, such as the practice of Aisha ra. From the hadith of Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiqi (which will be explained later), is contrary to his own hadith and as in the hadith of Abu Musa about requiring guardians in marriage.

Building upon the evaluations above, both of these hadith appear to be weak. Therefore, the Hasan Shahih level given by al-Turmuzi and the Shahih level given by Ibn Hibban and Hakim is considered too high for these hadith. It is supposed to be downgraded to a lower level and needs further research (Ja'far, 2020).

The last one is the hadith from Muhammad Ibnu Abubakar Al-Shiddiq, with the matan is based on Imam Malik (Zakariya, 2010) Translation: From Muhammad Ibn Abubakar Al-Shiddiq that Aisha, the wife of the Prophet Muhammad, married the Hafsah bint Abdul Rahman with Munzir Ibn Zuber on the matter that he (Abd Rahman) was in the land of Sham. When he came, he was upset about Aisha's actions, then Aisha told the problem to Munzir Ibn Zuber. Let the problem be solved by Abd Rahman, Munzir answered. After that Abd Rahman said: I have never rejected Ayesha's wisdom. Based on that, Hafsah (took a stand for) remained with Munzir, and there was no divorce. This hadith was narrated by Malik from Abd Rahman ibn Qasim.

No detailed explanation was found regarding the sanad of this hadith. However, the dissent of the hadith scholars is arousing around the understanding of matan hadith itself. According to al-Bakhy, as explained by Muhammad Zakariya (2010), there are two possible meanings of this hadith. First, Aisha herself pronounced the marriage contract, but this narration was refuted by Ibn Muzayyan, as it contradicted the practice of the Madinah clerics (amal al-Madinah), because Imam Malik himself and a number of other fuqaha ‘did not allow women to become marriage guardians. Second, Aisha's attitude towards the marriage was only to stipulate the dowry and other needs, not as a guardian. It is possible that the guardian of the marriage was one of the close relatives of Hafsah. However, there is no further explanation about the guardian in this marriage. This information shows that because the two narrations were not mentioned concretely, it is scientifically difficult to maintain the truth of the narration.
Furthermore, al-Baakhy, as explained by Muhammad Zakariya (2010), argued that according to the Maliki school, the marriage between Hafsah Abd Rahman and Munzir Ibn Zuber (whom her father, Abd Rahman, was far away in Sham at that time) is not allowed at all. Besides, Hafsah was still a virgin and her father was alive at the time the marriage was held.

Al-Zarqani (2010), who is also an explainer of the Muwatta book, denied al-Bakhy's information arguing that Aisha's actions was considered legitimate and there was no one to represent her and her privilege as the wife of Rasulullah PBUH. Although the wali is far away, the guardianship in marriage is necessary, even if the wali is not the wife of Rasulullah PBUH. If the marriage carried out by Aisha was true and an example of a marriage that was guarded by a woman because it was Aisha's privilege as the wife of the Prophet; the questions are why some scholars never considered her as guardian in marriage and how to deal with hadiths related to the marriage guardianship which also originated from Aisha herself? Textually, it can be said that there are two contradicting cases committed by the same person; on one hand, Aisha is presupposed only the men as wali in marriage yet on the other hand, she herself through her practice (marrying Hafsah with Munzir) acknowledged the acquisition of women as a wali in the marriage (Nafuri, 2010; Baihaqi, 2010; Zakariya, 2010).

Based on the previous analyses, it can be concluded that their dissent in comprehending the matan of the hadith is because the lafaz (the pronouncement) of the hadith is too general. The jumhur fuqaha' preferences of the first opinion -the best guess- because the hadiths related to marriage (that is mentioned above) are considered as pentakhsis (as specialisation) for the generality of the former hadith.

Conversely, the Hanafi School preferred the second opinion because the hadiths were not served to explain the generality of this hadith because the validity of the sanad is in doubt. They argued what was done by Aisha (which was approved by all scholars, including jumhur fuqaha’) was one of the causes of the weakness of the hadith (about a wali must be a man in marriage guardianship), to be used as a source of law. Hanafi even assumed that Aisha's hadith about the marriage of Hafsah and Munzir was a nasikh (abrogation) of Aisha's aforementioned hadith or at least could be considered as inkar rawi (the denial on the hadith narrator) in the Mushthalah hadith (science about hadith) (Humam, 2010; Mubarakfuri, 2010). In addition, the scholars are still debating the validity of the sanad of hadith. Also, to comply with the general dalil (propositions) in determining the law is better than specific arguments that are weak.

Referring back to the hadiths which jumhur fuqaha' assume to be the dalil for the existence of a wali in a marriage, the Hanafi School considered the opposite. The Hanafi School believed that the validity of these hadiths is questionable, both in terms of matan and sanad. The flaw in terms of matan is sometimes caused by inkar rawi between one hadith and another, such as the practice of Aisha (Prophet's wife).

Likewise, for the hadith from Abu Musa and Aisha, the weaknesses of these two hadiths are not only because they contradict the Aisha's practice, in the event of marriage of Hafsah bint Abd Rahman and Munzir Ibn Zuber, and at that time Abd Rahman was in Bilaad as Sham, but also because the validity of the sanad of both hadiths are still debatable.

Regarding the hadith of marriage guardianship, the jumhur fuqaha' comprehensions tend to interpret the hadith textually rather than contextually. This is because they are concerned more about interpreting the proposition (dalil) of the text and disregard other probabilities. For example, when comprehending the verses, they are more influenced by the meaning of the text of hadiths of marriage guardianship, even implicitly it can be said that there is an assumption from jumhur fuqaha' that these hadith are served to specifically explain the general marriage verses.

On the other hand, the way of understanding adopted by the Hanafi school in studying texts, both the Quran and the hadith, is quite different from the pattern adopted by jumhur fuqaha'. The subject of the study is more directed toward the understanding of the texts as a whole, with the condition not only to pay attention to the various possibilities that occur between one text to another, but also to put the concern on the intent or illat included. For example, the meaning and illat are adjusted to the circumstance and situation of the community. Such thinking is more directed towards comprehension which considers the reason or illat of the law itself, in addition to manifesting benefit rather than just explaining the meaning in the text alone (Umar, 2020).

Interpretation of Verses Understood by Scholars of the Four Schools of Fiqh

The mufassirs selected in this case were Al-Qurthubi, Al-Thabari, Ibn al-‘Arabi Abu Bakar Al-Jashsas and Rasyid Ridha, assuming that their interpretation can represent the four schools of fiqh. Mufassir focused on two main subjects to understand the message behind those Quranic verses; the background of revelation and the literal meaning in those verses. First, the particular verse investigated in relation to its background of revelation is the verse that is more related to the issue of marriage guardianship. In addition, the scope of meaning and message in those verses are discussed.

According to several exegesis (tafseer) books, of the four aforementioned verses, the background of the revelation of verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah is the most related to this issue. Imam Al- Thabari (1954) outlined several narrations concerning its background of revelation and one that is deemed credible is the one involving Ma’qil Ibnu Yasar, who prevented his divorced sister to return (ruj’u) to her husband.

This is in line with the hadith narrated by Abu Dawud as follows: Translation: From Al-Hasan, that Ma’qil said, I have a sister which is dear to me, and when the son of my uncle came, then I gave her away to him and he divorced her once and did not take her back until her waiting period (iddah) finished. Then when I was going to give her away, her former husband came back and want to remarry her, to whom I said: “By Allah, she will never return to you” and thus that verse was revealed...He said I pay expiation for oath and I gave her away back to him for marriage. This hadith was narrated by Bukhari and Abu Dawood.

Mufassir agreed to determine that that hadith was the reason why verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah was revealed. However, they differ in the interpretation of the background of revelation and the interpretation of the verse itself. Al-Qurthubi (1967) maintained that the verse was revealed in connection to wali based on the interpretation of another verse that wali is prohibited to hand his daughters under his guardianship to a polytheist man. This argument is supported by Ahmad al-Sahar Nafuri (2010) who stated that this hadith counts as hadith that prescribes the existence of a wali in a marriage. Abubakar Al-Jashsas (2010) disagreed that the verse was revealed exclusively in relation to wali. He believed it is difficult to justify such an opinion since the prohibition has a general context which involves all parties, including the husband. This opinion is shared by Rasyid Ridha (2010) who believed that although the verse was revealed for a specific reason, it has a general application nonetheless, including the former husband who prevents his divorced wife to marry another man of her choice. The difference in interpretation will be outlined in the interpretation of verse 232.

According to Ibn al-‘Arabi (1950), the word nikah in verse 230 has two meanings, namely marriage contract (explicitly) and sexual intercourse (implicitly) (Khanif, 2019; Armia, 2017). Supposed that one adopts the first meaning, then it means a woman is allowed to give herself and others away in marriage because the word nikah is directly tied to her. On the contrary, if the latter meaning was adopted, it means women will never be allowed to give herself and others away in marriage. This is because the verse does not literally state so. In this case, he adopted the implicit meaning (general interpretation is based on the explicit meaning), arguing that the hadiths concerning marriage tend to support such opinions. In contrast, al-Jashsas (2010) believed that the verse should be interpreted based on its explicit meaning (instead of the implicit meaning). In fact, it is the meaning of such nature that is intended by the verse. In support of his claim, he pointed out two strings of words in the verse first; “until after she marries a husband other than him”, which means the woman herself in the pronouncement of the marriage contract and second; “there is no blame upon the woman and her husband for returning to each other” which is interpreted that a divorced couple have the right to return to their former marriage without involving a wali. In fact, the word wali, as intended here, not only includes men but also women. The differences of the interpretation of the implicit and explicit meaning are influenced by the schools of fiqh they subscribed.

Concerning the interpretation of verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah, mufassir agreed to interpret the word “prevent” in “do not prevent them from remarrying their (former husbands or other men)” to mean “to hinder, prevent and make it difficult”. However, their opinions differ when determining the prohibition in that verse. Ibn al-'Arabi (1950) argued that the verse is related to wali who are prohibited against preventing women under their guardianship to marry men of their choice. Prevention from marriage here means that the wali is not willing to solemnise the marriage. If women had rights to give themselves away, there would not be any prohibition against the prevention in that verse. However, Al-Jashsas (2010) maintained a conflicting opinion stating that the verse serves as the main argument allowing women to handle and run their own marriage, in addition to other supporting verses. In fact, he rejected the opinion saying that women have no right whatsoever in pronouncing the marriage contract.

There are two strings of words in the verse used to support this opinion. The first one is “do not prevent them from remarrying their (former husbands or other men)” of which he interpreted it to mean that women must not be prevented from pronouncing their own marriage contract with men of their choice. The second one is the word “al ma’ruf“, which is defined as equality of equivalence and mahru al-mithl. From the concepts of those two groups, he concluded that “no one has the right to prevent a marriage contract which a woman pronounce herself based on the principle of equality or equivalence and one which involves the giving of the mahru al-mithl”. Had the prohibition been imposed on wali, it would have meant that a wali will have the right to cancel the marriage only through a judge; if the woman did not marry a man equal to her or the man did not give her mahr al-mithl.

The difference of interpretation among the mufassir occurs where they associated the word nikah with different things. Al-Jashsas associated the word nikah with women with a consideration of the two strings of words mentioned above and thus, the interpretation takes on a broader meaning. On the other hand, the other mufassir associated the word nikah with wali and therefore, wali has the right to solemnise the marriage. This latter understanding is more closely related to that of the majority of fiqh scholars, while the former opinion tends to be popular among Hanafi scholars.

Concerning verse 234 of Surah Al-Baqarah, the most important part that mufassir refers to in understanding this verse is the sentence “There is no blame upon you for what they do with themselves in an acceptable manner”. Al-Thabari (1954), Ibn al-'Arabi (1950) and al-Qurthuby (1967) agreed to determine that the prohibition in “there is no blame upon you (wali)” are specifically directed towards wali. Similarly, the sentence “for what they do with “themselves” means marriage and the words “in an acceptable manner” means every lawful matters in Islam in relation to marriage, such as the choosing of a future husband, determination of dowry, etc., except for running the marriage contract since that is the right of a wali. As a matter of fact, the explanation offered by the three mufassir indicates that it is unacceptable and contradictory to the verse to let women take care of their own marriage.

On the contrary, al-Jashsas (2010) stated that the generality of the verse covers the marriage contract performed by women. The words “there is no blame upon you for what they do with themselves in an acceptable manner” can still be interpreted as there is no right for wali to interfere with matters related to the woman until she completes her iddah (including the pronouncement of marriage contract) as long as they are permissible in the Islamic law. The fact that male wali (guardian) is required in the marriage contract contradicts the intention of this verse. The opinion which holds that in a marriage contract a woman’s only rights are to choose the husband and determine the amount of dowry but not to handle her own marriage is rejected since wali cannot solemnise the marriage without the consent of the woman. The choosing of a husband and determination of a dowry will mean nothing if the marriage fail to take place.

Forms of Mufassir Subjectivity towards Schools of Fiqh in the Interpretation of Marriage Verses

There are four forms of possible subjectivity that mufassir have towards fiqh schools in interpreting marriage verses. The first indication lies in the difference of mufassir opinions in interpreting the background of revelation of verse 232 of Surah Al-Baqarah in relation to Ma’qil Ibn Yasar. Mufassir from the majority of fiqh scholars always associated the word nikah with wali, and therefore believed that matters about marriage should be taken care of by wali (Soraya, 2016), not others. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi School did not associate the word exclusively with wali and therefore maintain that matters concerning marriage can be handled by any parties, including women.

Another indication is in their disagreement with the definition of the word nikah, which is a crucial concept to clarify in interpreting a number of verses on marriage. The mufassir from the majority of fiqh scholars always associated the word nikah with wali, and therefore believed that matters about marriage should be taken care of by wali (Soraya, 2016), not others. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi School did not associate the word exclusively with wali and therefore maintain that matters concerning marriage can be handled by any parties, including women.

The next indication is in how they differ in the positioning of the function and degree of the hadith in relation to Quran. Mufassir from the majority of scholars believed that the command and prohibition in several marriage verses were directed towards wali, thus they also believed that several hadiths on nikah (aforementioned) serve to explain the generality of the verse in more details, except for the hadith on Aisha who acted as a wali in a marriage, which they considered against the law. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi School considered that the command and prohibition in the marriage verses have a general application, including to women, thus they maintained that those hadith do not serve to explain the verses in detail. That is because they argued that those hadiths have flaws in terms of sanad (chain of narration) and the content itself.

The last indication is concerned with the difference in how they attribute the importance of relationship between verses and hadiths in helping them make their interpretation. Mufassir from the majority of scholars did not put great importance on the relationship. Therefore, their interpretation is more partial and disconnected to each other, and the accuracy is also difficult to justify. On the contrary, mufassir from Hanafi School considered the relationship important. As a result, their interpretations are more coherent, cohesive and it is relatively easier to justify the accuracy of their interpretation in comparison to the former (Khudhur, 2020). These differences in interpretation may be influenced by the schools of fiqh they subscribed.

Conclusion

There are four forms of mufassir's subjective indications to the fiqh school they subscribed. First, when the mufassir differed in interpreting the Asbab al-Nuzul of surah al-Baqarah verse 232 concerning Ma'qil Ibnu Yasar. The mufassir of jumhur fuqaha’ maintained that the occasion the verse revelation is specifically addressed to the wali (not someone else), then the marriage guardianship must be handed entirely to the wali. Meanwhile, the mufassir of Hanafi School maintained that the cause of the verse revelation is specifically addressed to the wali, but they assume that the law is generally accepted, thus the marriage guardianship may also be handled by women.

The second indication is in their disagreement concerning the word nikah, the key concept to clarify the marriage verses. The mufassir of jumhur fuqaha’ associated the word nikah to the wali, then it is the wali who has the right to solemnise the marriage, not others. Otherwise, the mufassir of Hanafi School did not associate the word nikah to the wali, then the marriage matters might be handled by any parties including women.

The third indication lies in difference of mufassir’s opinion in positioning the function and the degree of the hadith toward the Quran itself. The mufassir of jumhur fuqaha’ considered that the generality of the commands or prohibitions in the marriage verses are addressed to the wali, thus some of the marriage hadith (aforementioned) are served to explain the generality of the verses in detail. On the other hand, the mufassir of Hanafi School maintained that the generality of the commands or prohibitions in the verses apply to all, including women, then these hadith are not served to explain the generality of the verses. That is because they think that those hadiths have flaws in terms of sanad (chain of narration) and the content itself.

The last indication is concerned with their dissent in how they attribute the importance of munasabat (correlation) between verses and hadiths in helping them in their interpretation. The mufassirs of jumhur fuqaha’ considered the correlation is less important, hence their interpretation is more partial, disconnected to each other and its accuracy is rather difficult to justify. Conversely, the mufassir of Hanafi School believed that the correlation is important, as a result, their interpretations are more coherent, cohesive and it is relatively easier to justify the accuracy of their interpretation compared to the former.

Finally, it is hope that the schools, mufassir and muhaddith in studying and analysing the problems occurred and developed should not be subjective in defending the truth of one opinion, or even to blame other opinions that are not in line with the opinions held. That is because an objective truth is difficult to achieve in such practices.
